

UNDERGRADUATE

Developing Indigenous Economists

Economists care about principles of equality, dignity and respect. They find solutions for poorly designed programs, policies and issues of access.

Each year, the UQ School of Economics offers a number of scholarships to Indigenous undergraduate students starting their journey at UQ. By growing the number of Indigenous economists, solutions can be developed with communities by people who understand them, and we can work towards real and lasting change.

“The field of economics is one that directly speaks to those who make decisions for the population. If we can provide a voice strong enough to those who will listen, then we can be a voice for change.”

I recommend UQ to other Indigenous students, as they promote an environment of empowerment through diversity.”
