UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA

Annual Report

MESSAGE FROM THE
GOVERNING CIRCLE CHAIR

“The Governing Circle ensures Survivors are at the very heart of the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation (NCTR), and that the NCTR honours and upholds Indigenous laws and protocols in everything we do.”

– DR. CYNTHIA WESLEY-ESQUIMAUX, CHAIR OF THE
GOVERNING CIRCLE FOR THE NATIONAL CENTRE FOR TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION

The National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation (NCTR) continues its vital work undertaken on behalf of Survivors of the Residential School system in Canada under the guidance from the Governing Circle, the Survivors Circle, and its many Knowledge Keepers. There are many obstacles along the path to reconciliation, and progress is sometimes slow, but we will always uphold the crucial work of truth-telling.

Our work is guided by the cultures, values, and protocols of First Nations, Inuit and Métis Residential School Survivors, their families and communities. As we move forward, we are always drawn back to the NCTR’s spirit name “bezhig miigwan” meaning ‘one feather’. This name calls upon us to see each Survivor coming to the NCTR as a single eagle feather and to show them the same respect and attention an eagle feather deserves. This name also teaches us we are all in this together – that we are all one, connected, and it is critical that we work together to achieve reconciliation.

Working with our partners, we saw the Truth and Reconciliation Commissions’ Calls to Action (CTA) 53 and 54 come closer to fruition as Bill C-29. This bill will create the National Council for Reconciliation and passed third reading in the House of Commons on November 30. This Council will require the Government of Canada to track the progress of reconciliation and be accountable for advancing truth as well as a strong process of reconciliation.

We are encouraged by the Vatican’s formal repudiation of the Doctrine of Discovery and its support for the U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Work will continue between the NCTR, the Government of Canada and the Catholic Church to further reconciliation and ensure Survivors, their families, and communities will lead the way in our pursuit of justice and healing from the harms caused by colonization.

This past year saw us take important steps in realizing the vision of building a new home and ceremonial grounds for the NCTR. We began with a consultation process with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit Peoples and communities across Canada. This was done to ensure the new spaces are culturally inclusive and support the vision of Residential, Day, and Boarding School Survivors. I thank all those individuals who contributed during this process, including the Governing Circle, Survivors Circle, Elders, Knowledge Keepers, national Indigenous organizations, and our University of Manitoba partners.

In October 2023, I was honoured to meet with The Sami Nation of Norway and Sweden, and the Swedish Sami Parliament. These countries have established Truth Commissions to address the restoration of Sami history, knowledges, and language. In December 2023, I was also invited to Taipei, Taiwan to meet with the Council of Indigenous Peoples to discuss their Reconciliation and Co-Existence Commission and to share our story and outline the powerful work of the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation.

The Governing Circle remains committed to honouring Survivors and to supporting and guiding the work of the NCTR.

Dr. Cynthia Wesley-Esquimaux,
Chair on Truth and Reconciliation,
Lakehead University

MESSAGE FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

“While more Canadians engage in sincere acts of commemoration and reconciliation, the voices of the residential school deniers are getting louder – those voices are dangerous and must be countered through a clear and unwavering commitment to truth-telling, and continued research and education.”

-STEPHANIE SCOTT, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, NCTR

This year – the third in which September 30 has been officially recognized as a National Day for Truth and Reconciliation – record numbers of Indigenous and non-Indigenous people took part in reconciliation-focused events across the country. The world continues to watch Canada’s path to reconciliation, evidenced by the international visits to the NCTR by the UN Special Rapporteur on the rights of Indigenous Peoples, Taiwan’s Human Rights Commission and Sweden’s Truth Commission for the Sami People and the Sami Parliament of Sweden as they chart their own course towards truth and reconciliation.

Through these events, we grieved the thousands of children who did not come home from residential schools and honoured the Survivors who continue to bravely tell the world about the truth of their experiences. These are hard truths about Canada's colonial history: truths that some people are still not prepared to hear and do not want to have told.

Unfortunately, even as more and more Canadians engage in sincere acts of commemoration and reconciliation, the voices of those who minimize, distort, and deny this history are also getting louder.

National and international media outlets have given a platform to residential school deniers who – despite having no expertise on the subject – loudly reject the findings of the TRC and dismiss the lived experiences of Survivors. The efforts of families to find the children buried at residential school sites have become a lightning rod for hatred.

The NCTR stands with Indigenous communities and families in calling for governments to urgently consider legal mechanisms that can effectively combat these hateful actions. We also call on all Canadians to educate themselves on the true history of residential schools.

For far too long, the truth of this shameful part of Canada's history was kept hidden. Survivors were told to be silent. The progress that has been made to finally acknowledge this history, such as Canada's official apology and the TRC, only happened because of the courage of Survivors and their steadfast commitment to the truth.

Reconciliation begins with a commitment to truth-telling. However, the burden of truth-telling should not be placed solely on the shoulders of Survivors. Reconciliation requires institutions, governments, and individuals to live up to their own responsibilities and complete and fulfill the TRC's 94 Calls to Action. We must all learn the true history of residential schools, listen to Survivors, and take a stand against deniers.

I am humbled by the Survivors and their courage and commitment to advancing reconciliation. The NCTR is committed to educating Canadians about the children who never returned from residential schools and why this truth must not be denied or diminished. We must all champion these truths, so that Canada will not falter or turn back on the road to reconciliation.

Stephanie Scott,
Executive Director,
NCTR

MESSAGE FROM THE SURVIVORS CIRCLE

“The Survivors’ Flag represents the strength and courage of Survivors who shared their stories and experiences to make sure the past is never repeated. I’m proud to represent First Nation Survivors and communities as we move forward in our healing journeys.”

— LAURIE MCDONALD, TWO-SPIRIT SURVIVOR AND NCTR SURVIVORS CIRCLE MEMBER

The Survivors Circle remains committed to ensuring Survivors voices and perspectives continue to be heard and remain central to the NCTR’s programs and policies.

“We took great care in finding a prominent location worthy of the National Monument dedicated to residential school Survivors and those who did not make it home. It is our hope that the site on Parliament Hill will bring visitors from across the globe to learn about our history and what Indigenous people endured in these institutions.”

— JIMMY DUROCHER, MÉTIS DAY SCHOOL SURVIVOR, AND FORMER SURVIVORS CIRCLE MEMBER

The past year provided many opportunities for Survivors voices to be amplified across Turtle Island. We were honoured to have many current and past Survivors Circle members participate on the Survivor-led Steering Committee for the Residential Schools National Monument, which will be located on Parliament Hill. The Committee will continue to provide advice and guidance on such matters as the Monument design process and the development of educational content and programming, and to ensure the project remains grounded in Indigenous values.

In June, Survivors participated in the re-raising of the Survivors' Flag on Parliament Hill. It was first raised on Parliament Hill in September 2021 at a special ceremony to mark the inaugural National Day for Truth and Reconciliation. Each Survivor was presented with a Survivors' Flag that had previously been flown on Parliament Hill. The flag will remain flying on Parliament Hill until 2024 when a decision is made about its permanent home.

The Survivors Circle worked closely with Canada Post on a series of four stamps issued in September to commemorate the National Day for Truth and Reconciliation. The stamps are intended to increase awareness and reflection on the legacy of the residential school system. The Survivors Circle wishes to stress the importance of truth as a precursor to genuine reconciliation.

"It's important for Canadians to learn the truth from us, the Survivors. We're the ones that lived it, we're the ones that were hurt."

— EDNA ELIAS, SURVIVORS CIRCLE MEMBER

Our members and many others were involved in consultations about our vision for the permanent building and ceremonial lands for the NCTR. We see this new building and sacred site with ceremonial lands as becoming a beacon for reconciliation in Canada. We see it as a place of learning and dialogue where Survivors' experiences will be honoured and kept safe for future generations. We look forward with anticipation the next steps in making this vision a reality.

Human Resources

In 2023, the NCTR staff continued supporting learning and dialogue about the truths of the residential school experience in Canada. This included supporting Survivors, families, communities, and others affected by the residential school system. Work continues to raise the necessary funds for construction of a new permanent home for the NCTR.

In the wake of ongoing discoveries of unmarked burials at former residential school sites, the NCTR is expanding rapidly to increase critical supports for Survivors, their families, and communities.

Over the past year, important human resources were added to the NCTR team: Ten permanent employees and eight contract (term) employees. They complement the existing staff and enhance the areas of Education, Outreach and Public Programming; Operations and Administration; Communications; and Donor Relations. As the work at the NCTR continues and grows, we anticipate adding more human resources in 2024.

CURRENT ELDERS-IN-RESIDENCE ARE:

recent role was as Operations Manager for Ma Mawi Wi Chi Itata Centre Inc.

“I am looking forward to being part of such a dynamic team and helping to make the vision of the new NCTR home a reality.”

Open House

On December 19, the NCTR hosted its annual Open House, with more than 100 guests in attendance. This was an excellent opportunity for participants to visit our building, meet our staff and hear about the work we do to support residential school Survivors.

Manitoba's Premier Wab Kinew attended our Open House and offered important words on how his team will be working on furthering reconciliation in Manitoba, including designating Truth and Reconciliation Day on September 30 as a provincial holiday, so that Manitobans can recognize the significance of the day and attend community gatherings.

Progress on Future Home & Ceremonial Grounds

The new building and ceremonial grounds will be located on the Fort Garry campus, specifically on the Southwood Circle development lands where a ground-breaking ceremony was held in November 2022.

This building site is being offered to the NCTR as an act of reconciliation by the University of Manitoba. The new home will provide the NCTR with the space it needs to fulfill its mandate and will be an international learning centre for people across Canada and the world to learn the truth about residential schools. It will house sacred items and records, thousands of oral histories, and Survivor statements.

In 2022, the Government of Canada pledged $60 million toward the construction of the building and grounds. The NCTR is undertaking to raise an additional $40 million from donors to complete the project.

In 2023, community consultations were held with First Nations, Inuit and Métis residential school Survivors, and members of Indigenous communities and organizations across Canada, to help shape the vision of our future home.

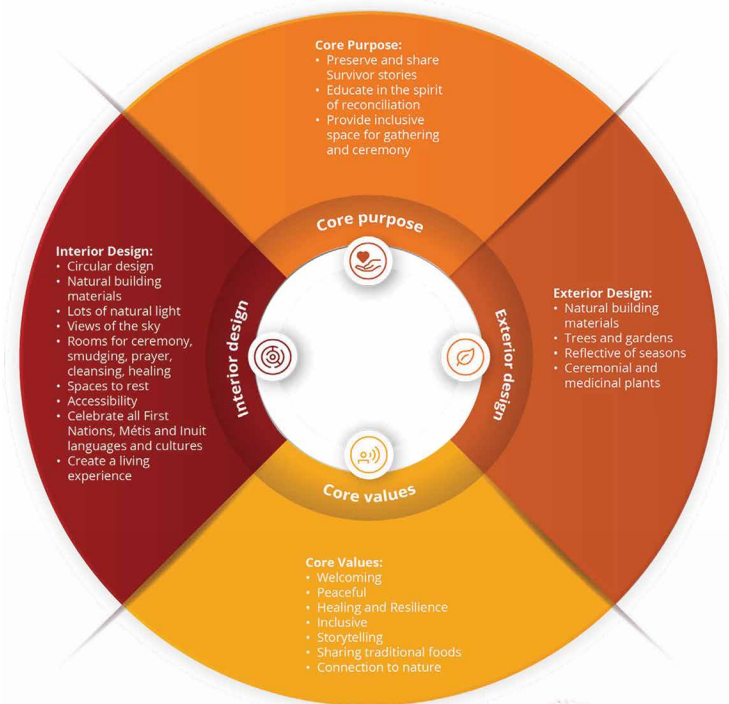

While respect and consideration has been given to the diversity of perspectives shared through the engagement sessions, the true spirit of the framework is to develop a shared vision for the NCTR's new home. The framework is comprised of four main elements:

The Core Purpose of the new building and ceremonial grounds, as envisioned by Survivors and their families, as well as the Core Values the new design is meant to represent.

The Interior Design and Exterior Design elements that were most prominent in the feedback we received from participants.

All four of these elements work together to provide a shared vision for the design.

ARCHIVES & PRIVACY OFFICE

The NCTR is working to restructure and decolonize the archives. This important project, led by Raymond Frogner, Senior Director of Research and Head of Archives, aims to rebuild the digital architecture of our archives, which currently holds 5 million documents originally collected by government and church offices for colonial purposes. The project will shift focus towards individuals, allowing future users to trace Indigenous connections through different institutions. The new endeavour will involve Indigenous communities and expand perspectives, particularly around photographs from residential schools.

 Requests are logged as one request regardless of how many family members' records are included in that requests, i.e. John Smith made a request for himself and eight family members. This would be recorded as one request to ensure that all records are kept together and provided back to the requester at the same time.

UNESCO Recognizes Archives

The NCTR archives were inscribed in the UNESCO Memory of the World International Register. The register serves to safeguard and promote access to documentary heritage of global significance: archives that chronicle the history of the world and the heritage of humanity. This international inscription recognizes the global significance of the NCTR's archives as a body of evidence and knowledge that documents the colonial attempt to assimilate and erase Indigenous peoples and their cultures, a human rights violation with parallels around the world.

"The magnitude of the NCTR's archives reflects the incredible strength of residential school Survivors in speaking out about their experiences. I'm certain that the inclusion of the NCTR's archives in the UNESCO Memory of the World International Register can serve to honor and amplify their voices on a global level."

— NATASHA CAYER, AMBASSADOR AND PERMANENT DELEGATE OF CANADA TO UNESCO

New Agreement with Manitoba Vital Statistics

Copies of provincial records in Manitoba that could hold important information about the residential school system, including the identities of children that never returned home from the schools or who died because of their forced attendance in these institutions, will now be available to the NCTR. A memorandum of agreement is a first step in improving collaboration between Manitoba Vital Statistics and the NCTR.

“Cooperation is part of reconciliation and healing. Governments must continue bringing records forward and work together with Survivors and the NCTR so that we can find and honour all those children who went missing at residential school.”

— ELDER FLORENCE PAYNTER, SURVIVOR.

Oblate Rome Archives Report

In summer of 2022, Raymond Frogner, the NCTR's Head of Archives spent five days reviewing Rome's Archivum Generale O.M.I. Romae (AG) which mostly holds the administrative records of the Oblate Order's Missionary operations around the world.

The report created houses key findings from records reviewed between 1830-2020 and consist of five different series: manuscripts, audio/visual, provinces, administration, and personnel.

The full report is available by visiting: <https://nctr.ca/oblate-rome-archives-report-now-online/>

The NCTR is working toward a memorandum of agreement recommending all Oblate personnel files be open to researchers, educators, and Survivors and their descendants. While these archives are likely not a resource that will resolve the search for many lost children, it will add valuable context to the operations and processes of an organization very closely involved in the residential schools in Canada.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada tabled 94 Calls to Action (CTA) to address the legacy of residential schools and advance the process of reconciliation. The NCTR reports annually on its own contributions to advancing the Calls to Action.

As many of the CTAs represent ongoing work rather than a prescriptive checklist, much of the 2023 activities for the NCTR represent iterative updates to this work. These updates include the following:

TOWARDS RECONCILIATION EDUCATION

Calls to Action 65

We call upon the federal government, through the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and in collaboration with Aboriginal peoples, post-secondary institutions and educators, and the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation and its partner institutions, to establish a national research program with multi-year funding to advance understanding of reconciliation.

The NCTR is working with the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) to set up the Reconciliation Hub. Six projects will be funded through SSHRC with the selection and grant coordination to be done in collaboration with the NCTR. In addition, the Reconciliation Hub will be hosted on a web site at the NCTR. The NCTR will also manage social media concerning the activities of the award-winning grants.

TOWARDS RECONCILIATION MUSEUMS AND ARCHIVES

Calls to Action 70

We call upon the federal government to provide funding to the Canadian Association of Archivists to undertake, in collaboration with Aboriginal peoples, a national review of archival policies and best practices to:

- i. Determine the level of compliance with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the United Nations Joint-Orontlicher Principles, as related to Aboriginal peoples' inalienable right to know the truth about what happened and why, with regard to human rights violations committed against them in the residential schools.*
- ii. Produce a report with recommendations for full implementation of these international mechanisms as a reconciliation framework for Canadian archives.*

The Head of Archives served on the committee that drafted the Association of Canadian Archivists (ACA) Reconciliation Framework. This is a published guide to decolonizing archives functions composed by Indigenous representatives and ACA members. Since publication the NCTR Head of Archives wrote a review of the Guidelines with other Indigenous and settler academics. Archivaria, the ACA professional journal has accepted this review to be published in the edition of the journal.

TOWARDS RECONCILIATION MISSING CHILDREN AND BURIAL INFORMATION

Calls to Action 71

We call upon all chief coroners and provincial vital statistics agencies that have not provided to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada their records on the deaths of Aboriginal children in the care of residential school authorities to make these documents available to the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation.

The NCTR continues to work with Manitoba Vital Statistics to acquire records from the provincial government office. The NCTR continues dialogue with the Manitoba Coroners' Officer to acquire records on children lost at residential school. The NCTR is also in dialogue with the Government of Québec to acquire vital stats and coroners' records, but has not yet received any of those records. The NCTR is in dialogue with the Government of Saskatchewan for both coroners' reports and vital stats documents. The coroners' offices records of British Columbia, Ontario, and the Yukon have not been transferred to the NCTR.

Calls to Action 72 – 76

We call upon the federal government to allocate sufficient resources to the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation to allow it to develop and maintain the National Residential School Student Death Register established by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada.

We call upon the federal government to work with churches, Aboriginal communities, and former residential school students to establish and maintain an online registry of residential school cemeteries, including, where possible, plot maps showing the location of deceased residential school children.

We call upon the federal government to work with the churches and Aboriginal community leaders to inform the families of children who died at residential schools of the child's burial location, and to respond to families' wishes for appropriate commemoration ceremonies and markers, and reburial in home communities where requested.

We call upon the federal government to work with provincial, territorial, and municipal governments, churches, Aboriginal communities, former residential school students, and current landowners to develop and implement strategies and procedures for the ongoing identification, documentation, maintenance, commemoration, and protection of residential school cemeteries or other sites at which residential school children were buried. This is to include the provision of appropriate memorial ceremonies and commemorative markers to honour the deceased children.

We call upon the parties engaged in the work of documenting, maintaining, commemorating, and protecting residential school cemeteries to adopt strategies in accordance with the following principles:

- The Aboriginal community most affected shall lead the development of such strategies.*
- Information shall be sought from residential school Survivors and other Knowledge Keepers in the development of such strategies.*
- Aboriginal protocols shall be respected before any potential invasive technical inspection and investigation of a cemetery site.*

THE NCTR HAS DONE THIS WORK IN THREE PHASES:

NCTR Missing Children & Burial Information

Phase 1 (2018-2019)

The NCTR began to address CTA 72 in phase one of the ongoing missing children project. At the time, we planned to work with communities to try to identify as accurately as possible the identity of missing children who were sent to residential school.

Research:

Reviewed student death research completed by the TRC MCWG

Completed pilot study of remaining 2.2 million TRC records not researched

Community Engagement:

Engaged with Survivors and 170 communities across Canada to build a shared vision for a new National Student Death Register

Development:

Established the National Student Death Register, a secure NCTR database containing specific data elements related to student deaths

Established the National Student Memorial Register, a public NCTR website (memorial.nctr.ca) containing a limited set of information on each student death

Phase 2 (2021-2023)

Research completed:

Fully analyzed the remaining 2.2 million TRC records

Over 17,000 references to student loss were identified, but not cross-referenced to other documentary evidence due to project constraints

All NCTR records in the internal database are now fully searchable through the fields that describe the records. This opens great possibilities for data analytics

Greater usability for community researchers

Phase 3 (2023-2025)

Research goals:

Verify 4,141 deaths in the NCTR National Student Death Register

Cross-reference over 17,000 indications of loss identified in the previous Phase 2

Deliver plan to research:

New records acquired by the NCTR since opening in 2015

New records to be acquired by the NCTR in the future

Community Engagement goals:

Build trusted relationships with communities to confirm and commemorate children who died or went missing

Engage with Survivors and communities across Canada to build a shared vision for a new National Student Burial Register

Education Program Review

The NCTR Education Program Review was created to inform the development of an educational program to contribute to advancing truth and reconciliation in Canada. There were three phases to the project including a landscape analysis, stakeholder engagement, and a final report.

The landscape analysis reviewed current educational programs across Canada related to truth and reconciliation. Stakeholder engagement was conducted with Indigenous peoples, students, Elders, organizations, NCTR Governing Circle members, Survivors, Francophone community, 2S individuals and partner organizations. A national survey was also developed to inform the final phase of the project.

A report of recommendations was developed and advised that an education program should focus on an ongoing learning journey tailored to learners' knowledge levels. This would be achieved using the strengths of the NCTR such as the expertise of Survivors, archival resources, and collaborative, strategic partnerships.

An education framework will guide learners on where they're at today and will help them go from an awareness stage to a stage where they are empowered to act and lead others. Benefits of this framework include being Indigenous led, done alongside partner organizations, looking ahead to the needs of the future, and focusing on a national impact.

Imagine a Canada

The annual Imagine a Canada national program recognized 25 submissions who were selected in the 2022/2023 program. Fourteen art and essay submissions and 11 reconciliation projects were selected as being uniquely beautiful, inspiring, and educational. These projects, and the meaning behind them, will be reproduced in one of two publications showcasing their creativity as well as their understanding of reconciliation. In addition to being featured in the publication, the chosen projects received a grant of up to $1,500 to turn their visions into reality.

"It is really moving to see so many young people submit what they believe to be reconciliation and what that means to them. It's so important that these voices of our future leaders and change-makers are heard and celebrated."

— NAVALIK TOLOGANAK, SURVIVOR CIRCLE MEMBER

The youth were recognized at the National Celebration and Honouring Ceremony in June at the Canadian Museum for Human Rights, where guests heard from the youth themselves about their projects and what reconciliation means to them.

The Imagine a Canada program asks youth from kindergarten to Grade 12 and CÉGEP to envision a Canada reconciled. Since 2016, the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation (NCTR) has received more than 1,400 submissions and has worked with thousands of students to realize their hopes and dreams of a Canada they wish to see.

Submissions for 2024 opened September 30, 2023. For more information about the program, visit <https://nctr.ca/education/educational-programs/imagine-a-canada/>

New Educational Endeavour

The NCTR has partnered with Meta to bring an educational endeavour online through a Messenger experience, accessible on Facebook and Instagram channels. It was launched during National Truth and Reconciliation Week. The experience is designed to guide Canadians as they learn the truths of the residential school system – allowing them to act towards reconciliation.

GATHERINGS

National Survivors Gathering

Breaking the Colonial Mindset was the theme of the National Survivors Gathering held in August in Winnipeg, Treaty One Territory. This gathering was an opportunity to acknowledge, honour, and support residential school Survivors and those who walk beside them on their journey – the regional health support workers and cultural workers from across the country. Over the three days, speakers and experts shared their experiences and insights, as we continue the path of truth-telling.

“This gathering is of the utmost importance to bring together residential school Survivors across the country to know that our truths are not unique to one or two people. Thousands of us experienced similar horrors at those institutions – they tried to break us, but we are here, and we survived so the truths are never denied or will be forgotten.”

— JIMMY DUROCHER, MÉTIS DAY SCHOOL SURVIVOR, AND FORMER SURVIVORS CIRCLE MEMBER

Statement Gathering

In 2023, the NCTR invited Survivors of the residential school experience, intergenerational Survivors, and their families to share their experiences at several in-person gatherings in communities across Canada. The truths of the impacts of residential and day schools, as well as those impacted by other colonial systems, were audio and video recorded and will be preserved and honoured by the NCTR.

At least 92 statements were collected in gatherings that took place in Chisasibi, QC; Montreal, QC; South Porcupine, ON; Toronto, ON; Six Nations, ON; Timmins, ON; Saskatoon, SK; Regina, SK; Winnipeg, MB; Opaskwayak Cree Nation, MB; Sioux Valley Dakota Nation, MB; Guy Hill Gathering, MB; Dawson Creek, BC; Vancouver, BC; Halifax, NS; and Truro, Mi'kma'ki.

By sharing their experiences, a place of learning, dialogue, and understanding is created, where the collective and individual truths of Survivors and others impacted by residential schools are honoured and protected to advance reconciliation.

Residential School Documents Advisory Committee

Many important steps towards a renewed relationship with Indigenous Peoples, increased accountability and addressing the ongoing impacts of residential schools were taken in 2023.

Chief Cadmus Delorme of Cowessess First Nation was appointed as the chairperson of the new Residential School Documents Advisory Committee. This came out of the directive issued in 2021 by the Minister of Crown-Indigenous Relations and Northern Affairs Canada, to establish a committee that would develop recommendations on the identification and sharing of documents of historical interest with the NCTR.

“There were over 130 sponsored residential schools in this country. Today many local communities, ad hoc committees and First Nations are leading the way in the validation of unmarked graves attached to former residential schools. This advisory committee’s goal will help by empowering the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation to house records many are seeking to help in their healing journey.”

— CADMUS DELORME, FORMER CHIEF OF COWESSESS FIRST NATION; CHAIRPERSON, RESIDENTIAL SCHOOL DOCUMENTS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

After the inaugural meeting of the Residential School Documents Advisory Committee in June, Cadmus Delorme, with Stephanie Scott, NCTR Executive Director, and the Minister of Crown-Indigenous Relations, the membership of the Committee was detailed along with an update on the exercise to identify documents related to residential schools.

Committee members were identified through consultations with the NCTR, the Assembly of First Nations, Inuit Tapiriit Kanatami, and the Métis National Council. They are:

Eugene Arcand: Survivor, Muskeg Lake First Nation, Saskatchewan

Maata Evaluardjuk-Palmer: Survivor, Mittimatalik (Pond Inlet), Nunavut

Shirley Horn: Survivor, Missanabie Cree First Nation, Ontario

Brenda Macdougall: Chair of Métis Research, University of Ottawa

Dr. Gwen Point: Intergenerational Survivor, Skowkale First Nation, British Columbia

Committee membership will also include representation from the NCTR, as well as: Agriculture Canada, Crown-Indigenous Relations and Northern Affairs Canada, Department of Justice, Employment and Social Development Canada, Health Canada, Indigenous Services Canada, Library and Archives Canada, the National Film Board, Parks Canada, Privy Council Office, Public Services and Procurement Canada, the RCMP, the Treasury Board of Canada Secretariat, and the Independent Special Interlocutor for Missing Children and Unmarked

Graves and Burial Sites associated with Indian Residential Schools.

Through an initial scoping review, the departments and agencies noted above have identified as many as 23 million additional documents related to residential schools and the implementation of the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (IRSSA) for the committee to consider. This collection goes beyond the type of documents that were required to be disclosed to the TRC under IRSSA and are in addition to the more than 1.5 million documents and higher-quality images recently provided to the NCTR through the MOU signed in January 2022.

The independent Committee will provide recommendations to the Government of Canada on removing barriers to sharing documents, while respecting Survivors' and their families' wishes, legislation, court orders, settlement agreements and ongoing litigation processes. One of the top priorities of the Committee is to ensure that stakeholder views—including those of Indigenous nations, communities, and Survivors—are reflected in discussions and decisions regarding the important work of identification, review of, and recommendations on sharing of residential school-related documents of historical interest to the NCTR.

Indigenous History & Heritage Gathering

In June, during Indigenous History month, the NCTR and the First Nations Confederacy of Cultural Education Centres hosted the Indigenous History and Heritage Gathering in Ottawa, ON in unceded Algonquin territory. It brought together diverse groups working to amplify the distinct stories of Indigenous Peoples across Turtle Island. The 350 attendees learned about how communities are building their narratives and how specialized historians, and researcher are addressing gaps in the historical record. Expert panels provided perspectives on the legacies of the Truth Commissions and historic research and commemorative practices to support the amplification of truths related to Residential and Day Schools.

The gathering was presented through the gracious support of Know History, the First Nations Confederacy of Cultural Education Centres (FNCCEC) and the NCTR.

National Truth & Reconciliation Week:

Honouring Survivors was the theme of Truth and Reconciliation Week 2023 and ran from September 25 -30. Throughout the week, daily educational programming took place with age-appropriate materials for students in grades 1 through 12, that featured both live and pre-recorded materials provided through a virtual platform. Students from all provinces and territories were able to learn directly from residential school Survivors, Indigenous artists and athletes, and other subject matter experts.

A new series of virtual Lunch & Learns was launched and the series was open to all. These were led by Survivors, with sessions including discussions around the history of the residential school experience, intergenerational impacts and ongoing systemic discrimination, Indigenous rights, acting towards Reconciliation, and so much more.

For a second year, the NCTR hosted a special live in-person and virtual youth gathering Gidinawendimin – We Are All Related in unceded Algonquin Anishinabeg territory that brought together 5,000 students. Students heard impactful words from Survivors and witnessed powerful performances from artists across Turtle Island.

On September 30th we co-hosted Remembering the Children with APTN, a live national broadcast and gathering held on Parliament Hill in unceded Algonquin Anishinabeg territory. This commemoration was a special moment to memorialize the children lost to the residential school system and honoured Survivors and their families. The gathering saw more than 2,000 people attend in-person and had a record number of 17 Canadian broadcasters participate in amplifying the truths of Survivors.

“Remembering the Children is where we come together to honour residential school Survivors and the little ones who never came home,” said Stephanie Scott, Executive Director, NCTR. “This commemoration is our time to reflect collectively as a nation as we listen to the Elders and Survivors who are sharing their oral histories and their healing journeys. Only then can we truly begin to walk the path of reconciliation together.”

Truth and Reconciliation Week is hosted by the NCTR with the generous support of our funders and partners. Funders included Air Canada; Arc'teryx; Canadian Heritage; META; North West Company; Royal Bank of Canada (RBC); Telus; The Winnipeg Foundation; and provincial and territorial governments of New Brunswick; Alberta; Northwest Territories; Manitoba; Nunavut; Ontario; Quebec; Nova Scotia; Newfoundland and Labrador; and Prince Edward Island. Partners included Canada's History; Canadian Museum for Human Rights; Canadian Commission for UNESCO; Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE); Canadian National Railway (CN); Hubilo; National Film Board (NFB); Télé-Québec en classe; and Wapikoni.

HONOURING SURVIVORS

Knowledge Keepers Forum

In November, the NCTR hosted a two-day Traditional Knowledge Keeper Forum at the Treaty Relations Commission of Manitoba, Agowiidiwinan Centre, located at The Forks in Winnipeg. The forum brought together 12 Traditional Knowledge Keepers from across Turtle Island to engage in dialogue and share traditional teachings on reconciliation, forgiveness, and healing to help inform the work of the NCTR and to revisit reconciliation.

Knowledge Keepers led participants in ceremony, knowledge sharing, traditional and ceremonial songs, and reflection. Guest observers were also invited to witness and write their reflections based on what they learned and how they would incorporate this knowledge moving forward in their own work. A follow-up virtual meeting will be held for observers in early 2024 with Knowledge Keepers presenting their thoughts and to implement feedback and provide further insight.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau on June 21 in unceded Algonquin Anishinabeg territory, to re-raise the Survivors' Flag on Parliament Hill to commemorate and celebrate National Indigenous Peoples' Day.

This commemorative flag was created by Survivors to honour all Survivors, families, and communities impacted by the residential school system in Canada, and to share their expression of remembrance across the nation. The flag was developed through consultation and collaboration with Inuit, Mi'kmaq, Atikamekw, Cree, Ojibway, Dakota, Mohawk, Dene, Nuu-chah-nulth, Secwepemc, and Métis Nation Survivors.

“The re-raising of the Survivor flag is a symbolic act that not only recognizes the importance of our voices but is also an opportunity to educate everyone on the history of residential schools and the children who didn't come home.”

Spotlight on the Truth about Residential Schools

On September 28, Canada Post unveiled four new stamps that shed some light on the truth and tragic legacy of the residential schools, whose impacts are still felt by Indigenous Peoples today.

The stamps were developed in close collaboration with the NCTR Survivors Circle as well as researchers and experts Dr. Crystal Gail Fraser and Dr. Tricia Logan. The Survivors Circle stressed the importance of truth as a precursor to genuine reconciliation. That includes coming to terms with the full history of the residential school system, and its enduring impacts.

“Reconciliation is not going to happen until people really understand and know the truth.”

— JIMMY DUROCHER, MÉTIS DAY SCHOOL SURVIVOR, AND FORMER SURVIVORS CIRCLE MEMBER

Featuring stark archival images of residential schools in different parts of Canada, the stamps serve as a reminder of the fear, loneliness, pain, and shame experienced by generations of Indigenous children in these federally and church-created institutions. The stamp issue serves as a vehicle for truth about Canada's residential school system to help support the process of reconciliation and, ultimately, healing.

The residential schools and school residence featured on the stamps are Kamloops Residential School, Kamloops, British Columbia; Île-à-la-Crosse Day and Boarding Residential School, Île-à-la-Crosse, Saskatchewan; Sept-Îles Residential School, Sept-Îles, Quebec; and Grollier Hall, Inuvik, Northwest Territories.

As a partner of the NCTR, Canada Post has entered a five-year sponsorship to support NCTR's important work sharing the truth and fostering healing. The stamps are available at canadapost.ca and postal outlets across Canada.

Residential Schools National Monument

In keeping with the spirit and intent of Calls to Action #81 of the TRC, the Survivor-led Steering Committee announced in June that the Residential Schools National Monument will be installed on Parliament Hill. The site, near West Block, was blessed by Elders during a special ceremony. The Residential Schools National Monument will be a meeting place where Indigenous people and all Canadians can gather to honour Survivors and all the children who were lost to their families and communities.

“We worked in collaboration and with the Algonquin people and followed their Indigenous protocols to decide that the Residential Schools National Monument will be located on Parliament Hill. There is no better place than the national capital to bring Canadians and visitors together to honour the lives impacted and lost to residential schools.”

— EUGENE ARCAND, CREE SURVIVOR

The Monument site is located on traditional unceded Algonquin territory. Consensus on the location from Algonquin Anishinabe Nation and Survivors is a first for any monument on Parliament Hill. The 16-member Survivor-led Steering Committee was established to oversee the Monument project through to its completion and ensure the project remains grounded in Indigenous values.

“Having Inuit input into the location of this National Monument is of great importance to our communities and the Inuit people who suffered greatly in residential schools. Our voices are as strong as our will, and I am proud to represent the Inuit on this committee dedicated to honouring Survivors.”

PARTNERSHIPS

Native Healing Coalition

In efforts toward uncovering the truth about the historical impact of Indian boarding schools in the United States, the National Native American Boarding School Healing Coalition (NABS) has released a digital map containing a total of 523 Indian boarding schools across the United States. This is the most extensive known list of schools to date and encompasses both federally operated boarding schools and institutions run by various religious entities. The digital map was created in partnership with the NCTR.

“NCTR is honored to partner with NABS to expand the international research of these assimilative institutions,” said Jesse Boiteau (Métis Nation), Senior Archivist for the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation. “Through this digital map, we are not just capturing history. We have created a tool that can be used today to impact what happens in the future.”

The 523 schools are shown alongside known Indian residential schools in Canada, demonstrating an international scope and context geographically for the first time. Users will be able to find the locations and general information about all 523 schools, including known dates, operators, and historical notes.

GOVERNANCE

Governing Circle

The NCTR is overseen by a Governing Circle. The Circle includes Survivors and representatives of the University of Manitoba and other partners. The majority of Governing Circle members are First Nations, Inuit and Métis Peoples. The Governing Circle is in turn guided by a Survivors Circle, as well as by Elders, legacy members of the Survivors Circle, and Knowledge Keepers. These governance structures are essential to ensuring Survivors are always at the very heart of the NCTR, and we rely on their advice and guidance to uphold Indigenous laws and protocols.

OFFICIAL VISITS

Manitoba's Lieutenant Governor

On September 13, the NCTR was pleased to host her Honour, Anita Neville, Manitoba's Lieutenant Governor who came to the Centre to hear about our work at the Centre and potentials for shared collaborative efforts that could further contribute to reconciliation. Ideas were shared and this partnership continues into 2024.

Governor General of Canada

On June 8, the NCTR was honoured to host her Excellency, the Right Honourable Mary May Simon, who made a special visit to meet the NCTR team. Her Excellency toured the gallery that holds sacred items, including the Bentwood Box, and the seal skin adorned report she gifted to the Box in 2014. She was presented with a copy of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's (TRC) final report wrapped in broadcloth – this was particularly symbolic as the NCTR was born of the TRC.

Taiwan's National Human Rights Commission

In October, the NCTR hosted Taiwan's National Human Rights Commission on Treaty One Territory. Representatives were taken on a tour of the NCTR and were provided with an overview of the work undertaken on behalf of Survivors. It was a very successful knowledge exchange as discussions included respective education efforts, and the work around record keeping and accessibility.

UN Special Rapporteur on the rights of Indigenous Peoples

In March, the NCTR was pleased to host José Francisco Calí Tzay, UN Special Rapporteur on the rights of Indigenous Peoples, during his visit to Treaty One Territory and the homeland of the Red River Métis. The meeting was an opportunity for residential school Survivors, the NCTR, and representatives of the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs, the Manitoba Métis Federation, the MMIWG2S+ Implementation Committee and Grassy Narrows First Nation to share concerns about the human rights situation of Indigenous Peoples in Canada. The importance of Parliament's recent recognition that the residential school system constituted a form of genocide under international law was highlighted.

The Special Rapporteur is expected to submit a full report of his visit and recommendations for action.

Update on Reconciliation Barometer

The Canadian Reconciliation Barometer measures progress of non-Indigenous and Indigenous peoples' shared journey toward reconciliation. The update provided in late 2023 is based on progress made since 2021 and comparing that to 2022 data. The study uses 13 indicators of reconciliation to measure good understanding of the past and present, acknowledgement of ongoing harm, respectful relationships, personal equality, and systemic equality. The data is based on nationally representative survey responses of Indigenous and non-Indigenous people in six regions.

Canadian Reconciliation Barometer

The report indicates that in 2022, more respondents were aware of residential schools and their harms than in 2021. Non-Indigenous respondents' views also became slightly more aligned with Indigenous respondents' views from 2021 to 2022, especially in the areas of reconciling with nature. With these improvements in mind, the report concludes that there is still "a lot of work ahead of us."

The Canadian Reconciliation Barometer research project is led by researchers from the University of Manitoba, the University of Victoria, Toronto Metropolitan University, Probe Research Inc. in partnership with the NCTR.

Reconciliation Network Coordination Hub

In 2022, the NCTR and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) formed a partnership on a national research program to advance understanding of Reconciliation. This partnership responds to the TRC's CTA 65: "To establish a national research program in partnership with SSHRC with multi-year funding to advance understanding of reconciliation."

As part of the Reconciliation Network Hub (RNH), the teams funded under this initiative will participate in coordination activities managed by the NCTR in its role as coordination hub for the network. In September 2023, NCTR hired Madeleine Ricard as Knowledge Mobilization Coordinator for the RNH.

Six projects will be undertaken by the RNH. The intention is to create a balanced network, which covers:

- Multiple geographic regions across Canada, and especially has representation from regions in the north
- Multiple themes and aspects important to reconciliation
- Reaches a wide range of communities including First Nations, Metis Nation, and Inuit

The RHN will ensure that projects are meaningful for Indigenous peoples, community engaged, and grounded in proper protocol and ceremony.

AWARDS & SCHOLARSHIPS

Helen Betty Osborne Memorial Fund

For a third year in a row, the NCTR has worked with the Indigenous Chamber of Commerce (ICC) and the Winnipeg Foundation to oversee the Helen Betty Osborne Memorial Fund. The application portal, hosted on the NCTR website, accepted applications until October 31, 2023. Applications were reviewed by an independent adjudication panel with representation from the NCTR and the ICC with 40 students awarded $2,000 each for a total of $80,000 funds distributed.

Helen Betty Osborne was a high school student attending Margaret Barbour Collegiate Institute and was on the home placement program administered by Indigenous and Northern Affairs Canada when she was brutally murdered in northern Manitoba in 1971. It took 16 years for anyone to be charged with her murder.

Indigenous birthing practices is a step towards returning birth knowledge and births back to communities.

The Malcolm & Catherine Dewar Truth and Reconciliation Fellowship was established to support action that is intentional and effectual. The University of Manitoba alumni couple established the fellowship to reward the academic achievements of graduate students at the university pursuing research in the area of truth and reconciliation.

Stephanie's research connects to Calls to Action #12 and #22 on culturally appropriate early childhood education programs and for the recognition and use of Indigenous health knowledge within the health care system.

Na-mi-quai-ni-mak

The NCTR's Na-mi-quai-ni-mak ("I remember them") Community Support Fund provides grants to Indigenous communities for memorial and healing activities such as community ceremonies and feasts, commemorative markers such as gardens and plaques and maintenance of burial sites.

In 2023, a total of $347,012 in grants funds were awarded to a diverse memorial and healing initiatives across Canada. Thirty-five of those initiatives were funded by Parks Canada and eleven were funded through the NCTR Donor Fund.

An example of one project in Saskatchewan, is the Flying Dust First Nation's Traditional Powwow. It exemplifies the profound significance of cultural expression and communal healing. This annual event honors the community and the children impacted by residential schools, providing a space for remembrance, perseverance, and community bonding. Survivor gatherings like these play a crucial role in empowering Survivors and communities, fostering a sense of belonging, solidarity, and hope amidst ongoing challenges.

The NCTR Research Grants Fund

The NCTR awards funding to researchers from various Canadian institutions annually. Some of the projects underway in 2023 included:

A project that involved interviewing community grassroots walking initiatives spearheaded by Survivors and intergenerational Survivors that seek to promote healing through physical act of walking and strengthening oneself, through connection between other Indigenous people, and through ceremonies held at significant sites including residential schools. These walks are examples of important collective healing initiatives.

An archival research project that examines the development of child welfare concerning two communities in Nunavut. The project explores the process, communication, and decision-making that led to these two communities holding authority over child welfare, then foregoing this same authority years later.

A project to develop curriculum resources for K-12 education across Canada, based on an open access, interactive, and dynamic map of the Indian Day Schools. The project includes developing lesson plans for specific Indian Day Schools that operated in Curve Lake First Nation and Peguis First Nation.

Development of a student journal called Muses from the North, which provides Indigenous students with a platform where they can showcase their literary works. One of the guiding principles of the journal is that no one can tell one's story better than oneself. Some of examples of student literary works included in issues is poems about being an intergenerational Survivor and interviews between students and their Survivor relatives.

DONOR SPOTLIGHT

Robert (Bob) Fraser is a retired hospital pharmacist with a passion for woodworking. Several years ago he saw a documentary about Haida carvers and was moved by the dilemma they faced in trying to encourage young people in their community to begin carving and carry on the skills and tradition. The need for more tools would help to provide more opportunities.

Bob had a large collection of woodcarving tools and decided that he wanted to contribute them to be used to teach the young people in the Haida community to carve. He connected with the carver Kihlyahda Christian

White. One thing led to another, and he ended up driving a container of carving tools to Old Massett on Haida Gwaii. While he stayed with them, he was moved by the level of respect he saw being practiced towards each other and everything around them. This began a relationship with the Haida people that has deeply affected Bob.

He became aware of the history of Indigenous Peoples in Canada and the crimes committed against them and began reading about reconciliation. This sparked a desire in him to learn about reconciliation and how to action this every day forward.

“Anything I can do to do my tiny bit for reconciliation, and if that inspires others, we can magnify each other. We all need to help.”

Bob believes that to practice reconciliation requires practicing respect towards all of creation and he tries to practice that in his daily life.

When it came time to update his estate plans, Bob wanted to commit half of his estate to an Indigenous organization in Manitoba. A contact told him about the Na-mi-quai-ni-mak Fund at the NCTR. Having learned about the suffering that Survivors endured, and still endure because of their residential school experiences, he decided, as a personal act of reconciliation, to contribute half of his estate to the fund, which provides funding for community and Survivor-led activities that support healing, memorials and remembrance in their communities.

“Indigenous Peoples have taught us how to respect all things in creation. If we all followed the seven teachings, the world would be a much better place.”
