

Procurement Notices Alert Subscription Service

About Procurement Notices

The World Bank finances about US$ 15 billion worth of procurements annually across 132 client countries. Procurements range from simple and routine goods and services to complex major infrastructure projects. Client countries are required to publish procurement notices for procurements subject to open international competition in the local press and the UN Development Business \(UNDB\). The World Bank also publishes these notices on its website to make them available to wider audiences, including suppliers, contractors, consultants, civil society, and other interested parties. The two main types of notices are procurement opportunities/invitations and contract awards.

The new Procurement Notices Alerts Subscription service

The World Bank has launched a new procurement notices alerts subscription service that enables interested parties to subscribe for notices for products and services in countries of interest and receive an email notification whenever a relevant procurement notice is published on the World Bank Website. This service enables users to access these notifications without having to regularly monitor the World Bank website to seek for new notices. This service is provided free of charge.

How to subscribe

To subscribe, follow the steps below:

1. Go to <https://alerts.worldbank.org/>
2. Register as a “new user” or log in as an “existing user”
3. Select “Procurement Notices”
4. Select countries and products/services of interest
5. Save the alert.

Once the subscription is completed, users will receive an email notification upon the publication of procurement opportunities and contract awards for the selected products/services in the selected countries.