State Government Structure

Background

The Minnesota Territory was organized under an 1849 Act of Congress authorizing its people to form a constitution and a state government. A state constitution was adopted and state officers were elected in October 1857. Minnesota was admitted to the Union on May 11, 1858.

“Minnesota was admitted to the Union on May 11, 1858”

Constitution

The Minnesota Constitution provides the basis for the state’s government. All government actions must comply with the provisions of the constitution. Any change to the constitution must be approved by a majority of both houses of the Legislature and submitted to the people for voter approval. Under the Minnesota Constitution, the powers of government are divided into three separate and distinct branches: legislative, executive and judicial.

The constitution is printed in the Minnesota Legislative Manual, published each biennium by the Office of the Secretary of State. Individual copies of the constitution may be obtained from the Chief Clerk’s Office or House Public Information Services.

Legislative Branch

The legislative branch consists of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The 134 House members are elected to a two-year term; the 67 senators to a four-year term, except in the year preceding redistricting, this takes place after each census, and their term of election is for two years.

The Legislature is responsible for making new law, changing or abolishing old law, establishing a state budget and tax policy, proposing changes to the state constitution, electing University of Minnesota regents and overseeing the work of the government. In addition, the Legislature has a number of judicial functions.

The House of Representatives has the power to impeach the governor, secretary of state, auditor, attorney general and the judges of the Supreme Court, Court of Appeals and district courts. The Senate conducts proceedings to determine if a conviction is warranted.

Executive Branch

The executive branch consists of five constitutional officers: governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor and attorney general. The primary function of the executive branch is to carry out the day-to-day operation of state government. The work is divided among the constitutional officers, departments and agencies, members appointed or elected to various state boards, committees, councils and authorities under the broad guidance of the governor.

The constitution charges the governor with the responsibility of preparing for the Legislature an annual report on the general condition of the state. In addition, by statute, the governor must submit a proposed budget to the Legislature within three weeks of the first Monday of January in odd-numbered years.

Traditionally, the governor presents legislative priorities to the Legislature at the beginning of each session in an address and a written report.

Judicial Branch

The main functions of the judicial branch are to resolve disputes between private parties and to hear criminal prosecutions. The judiciary has the power to rule that a law enacted by the Legislature is unconstitutional.

Minnesota's judicial branch is comprised of the Supreme Court, Court of Appeals and district courts.

Supreme Court

The Minnesota Supreme Court, comprised of a chief justice and six associate justices, is the final authority in Minnesota's judicial system. The Supreme Court has administrative power over the judges and personnel of the lower courts, and regulatory authority over all attorneys in the state. Its other chief responsibility is hearing appeals of decisions made by the Court of Appeals. It also serves as a reviewing body for decisions of the Minnesota Tax Court and Workers' Compensation Court of Appeals. In addition to hearing appeals, the Supreme Court is responsible for overseeing the machinery of justice in the state, for regulating the practice of law and for making recommendations to improve the judicial system.

Court of Appeals

The judges of the Court of Appeals hear appeals from all the trial courts and from proceedings under the Administrative Procedures Act, including unemployment decisions of the Department of Employment and Economic Development commissioner. The Court of Appeals chambers are in the Minnesota Judicial Center, but the judges travel around the state to hear oral arguments in the same judicial district where the trial took place.

District Courts

A district court is a trial court of general jurisdiction, meaning it has the power to hear any civil or criminal case. There are 10 judicial districts. District courts hear civil actions, gross misdemeanors and misdemeanor cases, as well as juvenile, family and probate matters.

Conciliation Courts

Conciliation courts, also know as "small claims courts," hear civil disputes up to $15,000. However, disputes over consumer credit transactions must be no more than $4,000 to be heard in conciliation court.

Before the Session

Certificate of Election

A member's certificate of election is sent by the secretary of state directly to the chief clerk of the House or, for the Senate, it is sent to the secretary of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk's Office retains the certificate until the new member is sworn in. A member can expect to receive the certificate a few days after being sworn in.

Election of Caucus Leaders

Usually within a week after the general election, members from each party meet on an informal basis to organize and elect leaders for their individual caucuses. Each caucus can nominate a speaker-designate (the speaker is officially elected by the members of the entire House on the first day of session). The majority caucus also elects a majority leader and a majority whip, and the minority caucus elects a minority leader and minority whip. Selection of assistant leaders is done by each caucus, but the time and manner of this selection process varies from biennium to biennium and caucus to caucus.

The caucuses also meet periodically during the session, primarily to exchange information on various issues.

House Rules and Joint Rules

The state constitution provides for each house of the Legislature to establish its own rules of procedure. Each biennium, the House does this by adopting the Permanent Rules of the House, which are drafted by the Committee on Rules and Legislative Administration early in the session. Until the new rules are adopted, the House adopts the rules of the previous session as temporary rules. Proposed rules can be amended on the House Floor.

In addition, Joint Rules of the Senate and the House are adopted. The Joint Rules apply when the House and Senate meet together in joint convention, in conference committees and in procedural matters that must be the same in both houses.

Selection of Committee Chairs and Committee Assignments

The number of standing committees and their areas of responsibility are set each biennium by the speaker of the House. Under the House Rules,

“Usually within a week or two after the general election, members from each party meet on an informal basis to organize and elect leaders for their individual caucuses”

Before the Session

30 days before a new session convenes, the speaker-designate submits to the leader of the minority caucus this information along with the number of minority caucus members to be appointed to each committee.

The speaker names the chair, vice-chair and members of each committee. Following the general election, each member may indicate their committee preference. Generally, members serve on three or four standing committees. Majority caucus members submit requests directly to the speaker-designate (the nominee elected by the majority caucus). The minority caucus members make their requests through the minority leader who submits recommendations for minority representation on the standing committees to the speaker-designate at least 15 days before convening a new session.

Committees are balanced with respect to party, occupation and geographic area represented by the members of the House.

Due to scheduling conflicts, assignment to one committee may preclude another committee assignment.

House Members' Rights

Being a member of the House of Representatives brings with it many duties, responsibilities and rights.

Speech and Debate Privilege

The state constitution provides a relatively broad speech and debate privilege for matters relating to legislative activities. For example, the privilege protects a legislator from liability for libel or slander for statements made in floor or committee debate. Similarly, the privilege prevents litigants from compelling legislators to testify or provide documents relating to legislative activities or duties (under most circumstances).

In order to qualify for the protection of the privilege, the legislator's actions or conduct must fall within what the courts describe as the "legitimate legislative sphere." Matters not directly or integrally related to the legislative process and activities are not privileged. For example, press releases and letters to constituents have been held not to be privileged. The exact scope and extent of the privilege will depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of the case.

The issue does not often arise, but legislators should be aware of the possibility and understand the elements of protected and unprotected speech.

Conflicts of Interest

A House member required to vote on an issue that would substantially affect either his or her personal financial interests, or a business he or she is associated with, must not vote on it. At the member's request, the House may excuse the member from voting on a question.

Holding Other Offices

The state constitution provides that a legislator cannot hold any other state or federal office, except postmaster or notary public. A member who is elected or appointed to another office must resign from the Legislature.

The Minnesota Supreme Court defines an "office" under this provision as a position in which the person has authority under law, either alone or with equals, to determine public policy or make a final decision not subject to another's supervisory approval.

Court cases or attorney general opinions have indicated that legislators may not hold the following offices:

- city charter commission member
- city council member
- civil service board member
- municipal assessor

- county attorney
- park board member
- county commissioner
- police chief
- county veterans service officer
- school board member
- county welfare board member
- state fair board member
- deputy registrar of deeds
- mayor
- deputy registrar of motor vehicles

Some positions that legislators may hold include:

- employment with any government unit where the individual does not make final decisions that are subject to no one else's review
- architect
- cashier
- engineer
- inspector or investigator for regulatory agency
- police officer
- attorney
- census supervisor
- instructor

Notary Public Privilege

By law, all members during their term of office are notaries. However, they may not receive any fee for notarizing documents. When acting as a notary, a House member must sign as follows:

"Rep. _____, District _____, Minnesota.
My term expires _____."

The Office of the Revisor of Statutes has a staff member on hand to act as a notary.

Arrest Privilege

The state constitution provides that members cannot be arrested while the Legislature is in session or when they are on their way to or from the session, except in cases of felony, treason or breach of the peace. This privilege applies to misdemeanors or gross misdemeanors, excluding what the courts consider a breach of the peace. (Examples: assault or threatened assault, breaking and entering, driving while intoxicated, speeding, violent verbal attacks or other acts that cause serious alarm to people in the vicinity.)

The privilege only prevents detaining a member during session; it does not provide immunity from prosecution after the session ends. The protection is not automatic. A member can either assert the privilege in court or choose to waive it.

Civil Liability Exemption

A member is not liable, under state law, in a civil lawsuit for any act done in the course of his or her official duties.

Excused Court Appearances

A civil or criminal action in which a member is a party, attorney or witness may not be tried while the Legislature is in session or during an interim hearing. A member cannot be required to appear as a witness in court proceedings held during the session or any interim hearing, unless the court orders the member to appear and the speaker of the House or the entire House consents to the order.

The member may waive these privileges. In the event of a waiver, the matter can be tried at times that will not conflict with the member's legislative duties.

Criminal Offenses

It is a gross misdemeanor for anyone, by intimidation or otherwise, to prevent a member from attending a committee or floor session, casting a vote or performing any official act.

It is a felony for anyone, by threat, deception or other unlawful means, to attempt to influence a legislator in voting or performing any other official duty.

Legislative Employment Rights

Private Employment

A member who has a permanent position with a private employer in the state at the beginning of the legislative session must be allowed to resume his or her old job or a position of similar seniority, status and pay if he or she reapplies within 30 days after the end of the session.

A member of the Legislature must be restored to his or her job without loss of seniority. The returning member must be allowed to participate in insurance and other benefits provided to other employees. Retirement benefits may not be reduced because of time spent in legislative service. A member cannot be discharged without good cause for three years after being restored to the job, except in inverse order of seniority.

No employer or union can discharge or otherwise discriminate against a legislator who is an employee or member in retaliation for statements made or beliefs held in his or her capacity as a member.

A member can sue an employer who fails to comply with these provisions. The court can order the employer to obey the law and compensate the member for any loss of wages or benefits caused by the employer's non-compliance.

Public Employment

A legislator who is an employee or appointed officer of a municipality, school district, other political subdivision or a state-operated school is entitled to unpaid leave of absence during any or all of his or her term, with a right of reinstatement after the leave.

After the last legislative day in the calendar year, the member must be reinstated to the position he or she held before the beginning of the session, or must be given a position of similar seniority, status, and pay, if available, as long as:

- the position has not been abolished;
- the member reapplies for the job in writing within 30 days after the last legislative day in the calendar year; and
- the request for reinstatement is made no later than 10 years after the leave was granted.

After reinstatement, the member has the same rights to accrued and future seniority status, efficiency rating and benefits as if he or she were employed during the leave.

The member has no right to compensation for the period between the first and last legislative day in a calendar year and cannot be removed or discharged from employment for at least one year after reinstatement, except for cause after notice and hearing.

A member retains all pension rights accrued up to the time of taking leave. For purposes of determining pension-vesting rights, a member is treated as if he or she were at his or her extra-legislative job while on leave at the Legislature.

A member employed in the public sector is entitled to receive pension benefits for legislative service and for the other job. However, the member will not be paid benefits by both the Legislature and the other employer for the time he or she is on leave to serve in the Legislature.

The First Day

Defining a Session

The term “session” has several meanings in the legislative process.

Biennial Session

The period during which the Legislature meets, such as “The 93rd Session” (2023-2024).

Regular Session

The legislative session extends over both years of the biennium. The odd-numbered year marks the beginning of the biennium, and the Legislature convenes on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January. However, when the first Monday in January falls on Jan. 1, the first day of session is the first Wednesday after the first Monday, and it must end by the first Monday after the third Saturday in May.

In even-numbered years, the Legislature usually convenes in late January or early February. The Legislature must adjourn by the first Monday after the third Saturday in May.

The constitution states that “the Legislature shall meet at the seat of government in regular session in each biennium at the time prescribed by law not exceeding a total of 120 legislative days.”

Special Session

A session called by the governor “under extraordinary circumstances.” The governor may not dictate the matters to be considered or the length of sitting.

Daily Session

A meeting of either the House or Senate to transact business.

Convening — Opening Ceremonies

In odd-numbered years, the legislative session convenes at noon in the House and Senate chambers. The House is called to order by the secretary of state, who presides over the meeting until a speaker is elected by the members. The secretary of state also appoints a member as chief clerk pro tempore who first calls the roll by legislative district.

Oath of Office

Immediately following the calling of the roll by district, the oath of office is administered to members-elect by a member of the judiciary. In taking the oath, the members of the Legislature agree to support the U.S. Constitution, the Minnesota Constitution and to faithfully discharge the duties of office. Below is the text of the oath:

“Do you solemnly swear or affirm that you will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, and that you will faithfully discharge the duties of the office to which you have just been elected to the best of your ability, so help you God?”

Following the oath, the roll is called in alphabetical order to determine that a quorum is present to transact business.

Quorum

A majority of the House constitutes a quorum to transact business (68 members).

Election of Officers

Following the second roll call, the secretary of state calls for nominations for speaker of the House. Upon election by a majority of all members present and voting, the speaker takes the chair.

Minnesota law provides that members elect the following House officers: chief clerk, first and second assistant clerk, index clerk, chief sergeant-at-arms, assistant sergeants-at-arms, chaplain, postmaster and assistant postmaster, who, following their election, are sworn in.

Organizational resolutions and announcements by the speaker are next on the agenda.

Selection of Permanent Desks

The selection of permanent desks is done by resolution under which the speaker directs each caucus leader to assign permanent desks to their members for the session.

Committees

Committees generally meet on a regular basis at least once or twice a week. In the early part of the legislative session, almost all of a legislator's work is done in committee where a bill's fate is often decided.

After the first month of session, the committee load gets heavier as more bills are introduced and referred to committees. By the last month of the session, most committees have completed their work, and the focus shifts more to floor action and conference committees.

Legislators serve on a limited number of committees. Most serve on three or four. This allows members to focus on just a few areas of public policy.

Legislative Day

Minnesota law defines a legislative day as one on which either the House or Senate is in floor session. A legislative day begins at 7 a.m. and continues until 7 a.m. the following calendar day.

“The House is called to order by the secretary of state, who presides over the meeting until a speaker is elected by the members. The secretary of state also appoints a member as chief clerk pro tempore who first calls the roll by legislative district”

Daily Sessions

The convening time for daily sessions is set by the House Rules.

Rules of Procedure

The guidelines for procedure of the House session come from six sources: the Minnesota Constitution, the Permanent Rules of the House, the joint rules of the Senate and House, custom and usage, Minnesota Statutes and Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure. The most complete outline of House procedures is contained in the Permanent Rules of the House, which includes the order of daily business, guidelines for debate and decorum, precedence of motions and voting procedures. After final adoption, copies of the rules are provided to each member and are made available from the Chief Clerk's Office.

Legislative Procedure

Every November in even-numbered years, more than two million Minnesotans go to the polls to select peers to represent them in the Minnesota Legislature.

The Legislature includes people from all walks of life and professions. This diverse group of men and women work together to pass new laws and set public policy.

Ideas

Ideas for new laws and changes to existing law come from many sources. Some legislators receive ideas for new laws by sampling grassroots opinion and listening to constituents' suggestions during campaigns or through calls and emails. Special interest groups as well as groups with special needs and problems make their ideas known as well. A significant number of proposals come from within government itself.

The governor presents ideas and priorities in messages to the Legislature. The other constitutional offices, state departments and agencies, local, regional and county units, and legislative committees and study commissions all suggest new ideas for new laws.

The fate of each idea is determined by the members who guide its journey through the Legislature, and by the legislators who judge its merits at each stage of consideration.

Types of Legislation

The Legislature deals with two major types of legislation: bills and resolutions. The Legislature is also responsible for proposing constitutional amendments to the people, either by bill or resolution.

Bills

Bills are for the purpose of making new laws, or amending or repealing existing statutes and laws. House files (HF) and Senate files (SF) are introduced in their respective bodies. All bills have a title, enacting clause and body.

The title tells what the bill is amending, repealing or creating and provides references to the Minnesota statutes or laws that would be affected.

The enacting clause of the bill appears after the title and reads as follows: "BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA:"

The body of the bill is the proposal itself, which if enacted, would amend or repeal existing laws or statutes or create new ones.

Committee proposals, sometimes known as omnibus bills, may be composed of numerous smaller bills that have been under committee consideration, or it may comprise a number of ideas that have been brought to the committee's attention through public hearings and constituent mail. The committee bill's sponsor is the committee chair. Committee bills may be introduced and referred to another committee, but if no referral is made, the bill gets its first reading and is laid over until the next floor session. During the floor session, the committee bill receives its second reading and is placed on the General Register if recommended by the committee. A notation on a bill such as “Adams for the Committee on Agriculture” shows the bill is the product of an entire committee.

“The Legislature deals with two major types of legislation: bills and resolutions. The Legislature is also responsible for proposing constitutional amendments to the people, either by bill or resolution”

The words “by request” after the chief sponsor’s signature indicate the bill is introduced at the request of someone, often a constituent, and it does not necessarily have the support of the sponsoring legislator.

Resolutions

Resolutions are formal actions that express intent on the part of one or both bodies but are not codified into Minnesota statutes upon passage.

A House or Senate resolution is one that is acted upon by only one body and expresses the intent of the body.

A House or Senate concurrent resolution is one that originates in the House or Senate respectively, is acted upon and sent to the other body for approval. These resolutions relate to the internal business of the Legislature and therefore are not submitted to the governor for action.

Resolutions memorializing the president, Congress or federal agencies are treated in the same manner as bills: they are given a House file (HF) or Senate file (SF) number, assigned to a committee and given three readings in each house. Resolutions of this type, if adopted by both houses, are official actions of the state and are enrolled and printed in the Session Laws of the State of Minnesota (informally called “Session Laws”) for the year in which they were passed but not codified in the statutes.

Unnumbered resolutions are used when actions apply to a specific session and deal with internal operations of one house. Actions such as the allocation of stationery and stamps are usually proposed to the House in unnumbered resolutions.

A joint resolution is a decision by the Legislature on certain matters that can be decided without review or approval by the governor.

The Drafting Process

Anyone can draft a bill or resolution. But only a legislator can introduce a bill or resolution. There is a limit to the number of sponsors on a bill.

A member who wishes to have a bill drafted may bring that request to the Office of the Revisor of Statutes, to the House Research Department or, in some instances, to the member’s own caucus staff. When a member requests a draft, he or she may provide whatever information is convenient for the member. It may be simply the description of a problem or it may be a prepared draft of proposed new law, or it may be anything in between those extremes. Oral drafting requests are often sufficient, but supporting written material may be useful. Communication through an intermediary can cause delays, so a member may find it convenient to work personally with a drafter. Drafting is done by the research department or the revisor’s office without regard to party affiliation or member status. All drafting by these offices is done on a confidential basis.

Drafters are very conscious not to impose their own ideas on the work. Drafters, particularly those in the research offices, are available to meet with constituents, interest groups and lobbyists. Face-to-face discussion is frequently helpful to assure that the member’s intentions are being carried out. The drafter will prepare as many preliminary drafts as the member finds useful. Depending upon the complexity of the proposed bill, drafting may take from one day to several weeks. After the bill is introduced, the drafter generally is available to prepare amendments or assist in any other useful way. House research staff members are assigned to staff legislative committees, and hence, are available for drafting amendments during committee deliberations.

The House Research Department and the Office of the Revisor of Statutes circulate a list of staff members with committee assignments and drafting specialties at the beginning of the session.

Before introduction, each bill or resolution must be submitted to the Office of the Revisor of Statutes for final preparation. The revisor's office serves both the House and the Senate and is responsible for the technical preparation of bills for introduction.

Companion Bill System

When a bill is drafted by the revisor's office, the chief sponsor is given two copies of the bill with yellow covers for the Senate and two copies with green covers for the House. This is called the "companion bill system." Through the process, the chief sponsor in one body tries to find a member in the other body to be a chief sponsor and carry the bill in that body. This system allows an identical bill to be introduced and heard independently in each body.

Companion bills are identical when introduced, but they may change greatly as they work their way through the process. More than 90 percent of bills introduced in a session have companions in the other body.

Bill Introduction

Before a bill is introduced in the House, the speaker refers each bill and numbered resolution to one of the standing committees or divisions. The chief clerk then assigns each House file a number, which will identify the bill in its travels, much as a luggage tag might identify a suitcase even when the contents are rearranged, changed or replaced with new items.

The Senate has traditionally used a somewhat different path to introduction. Generally, bills and resolutions are given a number and assigned to a committee by the Senate president through the administrative procedures of the secretary of the Senate.

First Reading/Reporting

The state constitution requires that each bill be reported on three separate days in each body before votes for final passage can occur. These reports of the bill are called readings. A bill is given its first reading at the time it is introduced. Each reading is a signal that an action or series of actions have taken place. The constitution requires that a full day must pass between each reading, unless the rules of the body are suspended by a two-thirds vote of the body.

The Committee (or Division or Subcommittee)

The committee is the heart of the legislative process. It is where the most detailed work of the Legislature takes place.

It is the job of each committee to hold public hearings on bills, to put each bill it hears into its best form and to recommend to the full body only those bills that the committee feels merit further consideration.

Bills can affect several aspects of life in Minnesota. Therefore, more than one committee may study it before the bill returns to the House or Senate floor.

When a bill is introduced and referred to committee, copies are made available to legislators and the public.

The first time a bill can be amended (changed) or killed (voted down, tabled or ignored) is in committee.

The committee has a number of choices for action. It may:

- recommend that a bill be placed on the General Register as introduced (with its original wording);
- amend the bill to change the wording, add or remove provisions, or design alternative language

“The committee is the heart of the legislative process. It is where the most detailed work of the Legislature takes place” that may clarify, weaken, or strengthen a bill, and return it to the floor;

- adopt a “delete-all” amendment, which, in effect, creates a new bill, because everything after the enacting clause is stricken and replaced with new language;
- combine two or more bills on the same subject into a single bill, retaining one bill’s House file number;
- send detailed, complex or controversial bills to a subcommittee which can hear public testimony, call in experts, suggest amendments, report back to the full committee, ignore a bill, table it or vote it down;
- recommend that a bill be approved, with or without amendments, and that it be sent to another committee for further study;

- return the bill to the full House without a recommendation;
- write a committee bill based on the suggestions of one or more regular bills; or
- kill a bill by voting it down, tabling it, delaying action or ignoring it by refusing to give the bill a hearing.

The chief sponsor is the spokesperson for the bill in committee.

Committee members may have questions, so the chief sponsor must have a good understanding of the bill and sometimes the assistance of an expert. It should be noted that House staff — the committee administrator, committee legislative assistant and analysts from nonpartisan House Research and Fiscal Analysis departments — assist committees by explaining and helping members understand the bill.

The chief sponsor cannot rely on eloquence to safely steer a bill through the committee. The most effective presentation is a well-organized, concise recitation of the most appropriate information, backed up by facts and statistics. Bill summaries are often prepared with the help of staff. Staff may also be asked to speak or comment in committee.

Opponents and proponents of a measure may testify before the committee. Any resident may express views at these hearings. The chief sponsor can invite witnesses to speak for the bill. Opponents may also organize interested people to testify. All testifiers are subject to questioning by the committee.

House Education Finance Division.

When time is limited, the committee chair may create a list of people who have asked to speak and divide the time among the different points of view so a sampling of public opinion is heard.

After hearing from the sponsor and others who wish to speak, committee members try to reach a decision. They must give careful scrutiny to the bills heard in committee and use their best judgment when weighing public testimony in attempting to make changes or retain original wording and in making recommendations on measures.

Since no legislator can study every bill that is introduced, a lawmaker relies on the committee process and the hard work and careful consideration of colleagues to determine which bills are most important and in what form they will be taken up on the floor.

No committee hears every bill referred to it. Committee chairs may schedule hearings on a bill after a request from the chief sponsor has been received. During most legislative sessions, less than 10 percent of the bills introduced become law and the majority of the proposals are eliminated in committee. To speak of percentages can be somewhat misleading because the total includes companion bills, bills dealing with several aspects of the same problem, which may be combined into a single measure, and similar bills introduced by different sponsors in the same house.

Non-controversial bills may move to the General Register, or floor, in minutes. Some measures require weeks or months of committee and subcommittee study before a final recommendation is made.

Bills are seldom judged solely on partisan lines. Coalitions form and shift, and a legislator often finds that an ally on one matter is a tough opponent on another, regardless of party affiliation.

Before a vote is taken, the chief sponsor may survey committee members by checking their positions, answering technical questions and assessing the chance for an affirmative committee decision. Most of the lobbying on a bill involves educating committee members.

Lobbyists and residents on all sides of a question contact committee members, provide information and arguments to back up their points of view, and supply background data on their concerns.

Proponents and opponents may discuss compromises that will satisfy most members, or the sponsor may poll individual committee members on amendments to help move the bill through committee.

Votes in committee are by voice, unless a roll call or raising of hands (division) is requested.

A majority of those present and voting, assuming a quorum, is needed to amend a bill or change its status within the legislative process. Any motion that results in a tie vote is defeated. A defeated motion may be reconsidered by any member of the committee as long as the matter remains in possession of the committee. (Members of the committee who do not support a committee action on a bill can submit a minority report which is taken up on the floor of the House before the report of the majority of the committee.)

If the committee cannot reach agreement or does not hold hearings on a bill, the bill has ended its journey. (While it is technically possible to bring a bill to the full House without committee approval, this procedure is not frequently attempted, and is even less frequently successful.) Some bills are revived as amendments to other bills elsewhere in the process.

Second Reading

Committee actions are recorded in the committee report compiled by the committee's legislative assistant, approved and signed by the chair, and sent to the House floor for re-referral to another committee or adoption and second reading. Reports of committees are recommendations only until the report is adopted by a majority vote on the floor — approval is normally routine. The committee report on a bill that does not recommend re-referral to another committee includes a recommendation for placement of that bill on the General Register.

General Register

Bills being reported out of committee are placed on a list called the General Register, which is like a parking lot where bills wait to be taken up by the full House. Bills are placed on the General Register in the order that they receive a second reading.

Calendar for the Day

The Calendar for the Day is a list of bills that may be considered by the House that day.

Bills from the General Register are placed on the Calendar for the Day for consideration by the Committee on Rules and Legislative Administration. The rules committee is required to designate bills for the Calendar for the Day by 5 p.m. on the day before bills are to be considered by the full House, but typically does so in advance to establish the pre-filing requirement for amendments offered to calendared bills.

The House considers bills on the Calendar for the Day in the order determined by the presiding officer. Bills on the Calendar for the Day are eligible for debate and possible amendment. There is no guarantee that a bill on the Calendar for the Day will be heard on that day.

There also is another method of getting a bill on the Calendar for the Day. If a bill sits on the General Register for more than 10 legislative days, a member can make a motion to place the bill on the calendar. This motion requires a majority vote of the whole House (68 votes) for adoption.

Fiscal Calendar

Any bill related to finances, taxes or raising revenue that has had a second reading and is usually on the General Register can be considered by the House at the request of the chair of the House Ways and Means Committee or the House Taxes Committee. Such bills are placed on the Fiscal Calendar; from there, the bills are eligible for debate and possible amendment.

“The pre-filing of amendments provides transparency for legislators, staff and the public when preparing for floor debates”

A chair is required to announce his or her intention to place a bill on the Fiscal Calendar by 5 p.m. on the day before the bill is to be considered by the full House, but that requirement is lifted late in the legislative session.

Pre-Filing Requirement for Amendments

The pre-filing of amendments provides transparency for legislators, staff and the public when preparing for floor debates.

Once a bill is placed on either the Calendar for the Day or the Fiscal Calendar, the rules committee may establish pre-filing requirements for amendments offered to those bills. Additionally, any amendments to the pre-filed amendments must be submitted to the Chief Clerk’s Office no more than six hours after the pre-filing deadline.

All pre-filed amendments (and amendments to amendments) are available on the House website as soon as is practical. All amendments must be signed or submitted electronically from the member’s House email account and amendments that do not meet the deadline requirements are deemed out of order.

Third Reading and Final Passage

Once all proposed amendments have been dealt with, the bill is given its third reading. The bill cannot be further amended without unanimous consent.

At this point, controversial bills may be debated at length, but usually the chief sponsor briefly outlines the bill and stands for questions and a brief discussion. Unless there is controversy, the full House proceeds to a roll-call vote.

All votes on final passage are recorded by name in the official record, the Journal of the House.

A majority vote of all elected members — not just a majority of those present — is required. In the House, at least 68 votes are needed; in the Senate, at least 34 votes.

Authorization of bonds backed by the full faith and credit of the state require a three-fifths majority of all members elected. In the House, at least 81 votes are needed; in the Senate, at least 41 votes.

Preliminary Approval

Passage in one body of the Legislature marks the halfway point in a bill's legislative journey. A bill must pass both the House and Senate in identical form before it can become law. When one body of the Legislature passes a bill, it is transmitted by message (conveyed through an administrative procedure) to the other body, where it is again subject to the same steps outlined above.

There are several ways to speed up consideration in the other house. Chief sponsors of companion bills can attempt to coordinate House and Senate action. The first bill to win final approval is transmitted to the other house. For example, if the Senate version of a bill passes first, the Senate file is transmitted to the House.

If the House companion bill is still in a House committee, the Senate bill will be referred to the House committee. The committee will then take up for consideration the Senate bill that was referred to the committee. Any subsequent committee action will be on the Senate bill, although the committee can (and often does), delete the Senate language and insert the House language.

Comparisons/Substitutions

If the House companion is awaiting floor action on one of the agenda lists, the two bills are "referred for comparison" and they are read against each other and the differences are reported. This work is done in the name of the chief clerk by the revisor of statutes. Comparison reports are provided to the chief sponsor, the majority and minority leaders, and their assistant leaders, and one copy is filed at the House Desk. The copy filed at the desk is available for inspection by any member of the House.

The chief clerk reports whether the bills were found to be identical or not identical. In either case, the Senate bill will be automatically substituted (take the place of the House companion) in a motion by the chief sponsor. The House bill is then considered withdrawn.

In the House, the language of the bill that already has passed the Senate automatically takes the place of the language that was recommended by the House committee. If the chief sponsor wants to go back to the House language, he or she makes a motion to amend the bill when it comes up for action on the Stacks of floor amendments.

House floor and to substitute the House language for the language passed by the Senate.

In the Senate, the procedure is different. When a House bill is substituted for a Senate bill on the Senate floor, the Senate automatically places the Senate language back into the bill.

The Senate sponsor must propose an amendment if he or she wishes to use the House language.

Amended Bills

The House and Senate often pass the same bill in different versions.

When one house amends a bill that was approved by the other body, it sends the bill back to its house of origin. The house of origin must either, by motion accept all of the changes made by the other house and vote to repass the bill, or refuse to accept the changes and by motion send the bill to a conference committee to work out a compromise.

Concurrences

When the amended bill returns to the house of origin, a copy of the amendments from the other body are given to the sponsor. One option the sponsor has is to concur with the amendments. Many times amendments in the other body are minor, non-controversial or simply technical in nature. Sometimes the bill has left the house of origin with an amendment that the sponsor did not want, and it may have been taken off by the other body. Sometimes the bill is more to the sponsor's liking in the form it passed in the other body.

The motion to concur is made by the sponsor and must be approved by the body. Any member can make a motion to refuse to concur with the other body's amendments, and to request a conference committee to work out the differences. The motion to refuse to concur and to go to conference would be taken up first.

Assuming that the motion to concur prevailed, the bill would be given a third reading as amended by the other body, and the bill would be up for repassage.

Conference Committee

When either the House or Senate refuses to accept the version of a bill as amended by the other body, a motion is made to refuse to concur and send the bill to a conference committee, where three or five members from each body are to negotiate a compromise.

In the House, the members are appointed by the speaker and in the Senate by the subcommittee on committees led by the majority caucus.

Conferees are selected to uphold the position of their respective houses, but they have some latitude in trying to reach a compromise.

A bill's chance of passing usually increases as it moves through each step of the journey. But it may have rough going in conference committee. First, the bill is in conference committee because strong differences kept the two bodies from agreeing on the same version. Secondly, most conference committees work in the closing days of session under great time pressure. Usually, time permitting, each side makes some compromises and the final product incorporates elements from each body's position.

House research and/or committee staff, acting as advisors to the conferees, draft language for the conferees. However, the revisor of statutes prepares the conference committee report. Any member of a conference committee may request the drafting of all or part of a conference committee report.

When a majority of the conferees of each body have signed the report, it is returned to the revisor who makes final checks, and returns it to the house of origin for action.

Like regular committees, these committees are staffed by House and Senate employees who keep the revisor informed on the progress of the conference committee. Conference committees are, in fact, joint meetings of separate committees; consequently, a majority vote of each committee is required to take any action. If the conference committee votes to adopt the report, the measure is then presented to the body. This compromise bill cannot be amended. Each body can accept the report, give the bill its third reading as amended by conference and repass the bill, or it can refuse to accept the report and send it back to conference. As a part of the motion to refuse to adopt the report of the conference committee, the sponsor of the motion can request that a new conference committee be appointed to work out the differences.

When both houses repass a bill as amended by conference committee, it is enrolled by the revisor and transmitted to the governor for consideration.

Interim

Adjournment of the Legislature at the end of the first year of a biennial session does not mean the end of the road for a bill.

Bills that are in committee at the end of the first year of the biennium may be heard during the interim recess. Bills on the Calendar for the Day, Fiscal Calendar or General Register are returned to the standing committee last acting on the bill. Bills in conference committees and bills that have been vetoed after adjournment are returned to their house of origin, where they are laid on the table; and members of the conference committee are discharged. They may be taken from the table in the second year's regular session and acted upon.

Tax and Spending Bills

Development

Development of tax and spending bills follows a more complicated track from that followed by most other bills.

Budget Resolution

House rules currently require the House Ways and Means Committee to adopt a budget resolution each odd-numbered year that sets targets for overall biennial General Fund spending and spending targets for each fiscal committee or division. The committee sets this resolution after the state's budget forecast is released at the end of February. General Fund spending in bills passed by finance and tax divisions or committees must fit within the limits of the budget resolution. Because the state budgets on a biennial basis, the budget resolution covers spending for both years of the upcoming biennium.

Revenue Raising – the Tax Bill

Most tax changes will be collected into an omnibus tax bill that must originate in the House. When adopting the budget resolution, the ways and means committee must set a target for the tax committee that includes adequate revenue to fund spending authorized in the rest of the resolution. The committee examines the state's fiscal outlook based on the latest budget forecast, tax recommendations in the governor's budget and bills introduced by House members. The tax committee, as well as divisions and any subcommittees, holds hearings on these proposals at which Department of Revenue staff, bill sponsors and others testify on the impact of current laws and proposed changes.

Committee members use revenue estimates to determine the fiscal impact of a bill or proposal that affects state revenue. Revenue estimates are prepared by the Department of Revenue and reviewed by legislative staff.

Major areas on which the committee will concentrate include personal income tax, corporate taxes, sales taxes and property taxes. Committee discussions will include the effectiveness of current tax laws as well as the impact of proposed changes to those laws.

In addition to raising revenue, the tax committee is also a major spending committee in that state aid to cities and counties is funded in the tax bill. General Fund spending in the tax bill must fit within the limits of the House budget resolution.

Spending Money – Appropriation Bills

Committees with financial jurisdictions develop bills with spending recommendations for the agencies and programs over which they have jurisdiction. These committees usually use the early part of the legislative session to review the mission and goals of the agency and its programs, and review current funding levels for those agencies and programs. After the governor's funding recommendations are available, these committees review and discuss those recommendations and bills introduced by House members. State agency staff, bill sponsors and others testify on the impact of current laws and proposed changes.

Finance committee members often use fiscal notes to determine the fiscal impact of spending proposals. The nonpartisan Legislative Budget Office is responsible for working with state agencies to provide the House and Senate with information on the fiscal impact of proposed legislation.

While the tax committee has major responsibility for raising revenue, finance committees may also consider changes in fees and fines that affect General Fund revenue.

After the ways and means committee adopts a budget resolution, various finance committees begin to allocate funding consistent with that resolution. Omnibus funding bills that include the funding recommendations are developed. Other bills that include funding may be acted on, but all funding changes must fit within the spending limits set in the budget resolution.

Since the Senate may have a different finance committee structure with different agencies and programs, the ways and means committee may also combine or reorganize bills to fit with an agreed upon fiscal structure for action by conference committees.

Ways and Means Committee – the Budget Gatekeeper

Tax bills and finance bills are referred to the ways and means committee after approval of the taxes committee and the finance committees. After the ways and means committee determines that bills are consistent with the budget resolution, it refers the bills to the full House.

Tax and Spending Bills – To Final Enactment

Typically there are significant differences between the House and Senate versions of tax and spending bills; those bills are referred to conference committees to resolve the differences. When a conference committee resolves the differences between the House and Senate versions of a bill, that bill comes back to the House and Senate for final passage. Conference committee reports may not be amended.

When the governor receives an omnibus appropriation bill, the governor may sign the whole bill; let it become law without a signature; veto specific appropriation items (line-item veto) while signing the rest of the bill; or veto the entire bill.

The Second Year

In the second year of the legislative session, the tax committee and finance committees consider adjustments to the budget adopted for the biennium. In the case where there is a projected balance for the biennium, those adjustments may include spending increases and tax reductions. In the case where there is a projected deficit for the biennium, those adjustments may include spending reductions and tax increases. The ways and means committee may adopt another budget resolution to provide direction for those adjustments.

How a Bill Becomes a Law in Minnesota

Idea

1 A bill is an idea for a new law or an idea to change an old law. Anyone can suggest an idea for a bill — an individual, consumer group, professional association, government agency or the governor. Most often, however, ideas come from legislators, the only ones who can begin to move an idea through the process. There are 134 House members and 67 senators.

Legal form

2 The Office of the Revisor of Statutes and staff from other legislative offices work with legislators in putting the idea for a new law into proper legal form. The revisor's office is responsible for assuring that the proposal's form complies with the rules of both bodies before the bill is introduced into the Minnesota House of Representatives and the Minnesota Senate.

Sponsors

3 Each bill must have a legislator to sponsor and introduce it in the Legislature. That legislator is the chief sponsor whose name appears on the bill along with the bill's file number to identify it as it moves through the legislative process. There may be up to 34 co-sponsors from the House and four from the Senate. Their names also appear on the bill.

Introduction

4 The chief House sponsor of the bill introduces it in the House; the chief Senate sponsor introduces it in the Senate. Identical bills introduced in each body are called companion bills. The bill introduction is called the first reading. The presiding officer of the House then refers it to an appropriate House committee for discussion; the same thing happens in the Senate.

Committee

5 The bill is discussed in one or more committees depending upon the subject matter. After discussion, committee members recommend action — approval or disapproval — to the full House and full Senate. The House committee then sends a report to the House about its action on the bill; the Senate committee does likewise in the Senate.

Floor

6 After the full House or Senate accepts the committee report, the bill has its second reading and is placed on the House agenda called the General Register or the Senate agenda called General Orders. (A committee can recommend that non-controversial bills bypass the General Register or General Orders and go onto the Consent Calendar, where bills usually pass without debate.) After this point, House and Senate procedures differ slightly.

General Register

7 In the House, the General Register serves as a parking lot where bills await action by the full body. Bills chosen to appear on the Calendar for the Day or the Fiscal Calendar are drawn from the General Register.

In the Senate, a different procedure is used. Bills are listed on the General Orders agenda. Senate members, acting as the "committee of the whole," have a chance to debate the issue and offer amendments on the bill. Afterwards, they vote to recommend: passage of the bill, progress (delay action) or further committee action. And sometimes they recommend that a bill not pass. From here, the bill is placed on the Calendar.

Calendar for the Day

8 In the House, the Calendar for the Day is a list of bills the House Committee on Rules and Legislative Administration has designated for the full House to vote on. Members can vote to amend the bill, and after amendments are dispensed with, the bill is given its third reading before the vote of the full body is taken. The House also has a Fiscal Calendar, on which the chair of the House Ways and Means Committee or House Taxes Committee can call up for consideration any tax or finance bill that has had a second reading. The bills are debated, amended and passed in one day.

In the Senate, bills approved by the "committee of the whole" are placed on the Calendar. At this point, the bill has its third reading, after which time the bill cannot be amended unless the entire body agrees to it. Toward the end of the session, the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration designates bills from the General Orders calendar to receive priority consideration. These Special Orders bills are debated, amended, and passed in one day.

A bill needs 68 votes to pass the House and 34 votes to pass the Senate. If the House and Senate each pass the same version of the bill, it goes to the governor for a signature.

Conference

9 If the House and Senate versions of the bill are different, they go to a conference committee. In the House, the speaker appoints three or five representatives, and in the Senate, the Subcommittee on Committees of the Committee on Rules and Administration selects the same number of senators to form the committee. The committee meets to work out differences in the two bills and to reach a compromise.

Floor

10 The conference committee's compromise report then goes back to the House and the Senate for another vote. If both bodies pass the bill in this form, it is sent to the governor for approval or disapproval. (If one or both bodies reject the report, it goes back to the conference committee for further consideration.)

Governor

11 Once the governor has the bill, he or she may: sign it, and the bill becomes law; veto it within three days; or allow it to become law by not signing it. During session, the House and Senate can override a governor's veto. This requires a two-thirds vote in the House (90 votes) and Senate (45 votes). The governor also may line-item veto parts of a money bill, or pocket veto a bill passed during the last three days of the session by not signing it within 14 days after final adjournment.

The Governor's Role

The Governor

A bill passed by both legislative bodies in identical form is enrolled (compared with all records to ensure final agreement to one single version of House and Senate bills and carefully and accurately copied into a presentation format). The enrolled copy is signed by both presiding officers and by the chief clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate and presented to the governor. During the session, it is the date of the revisor's presentation of the bill to the governor, not the date of final passage that starts the clock running for deadlines for the governor's action on the bill.

The governor has several options:

- The governor may sign a bill and it becomes law.
- When the Legislature is in session, a bill becomes law without the governor's signature if it is not returned to the house of origin with a statement of objections within three days after receipt.
- If the governor objects to a bill, it can be vetoed and a message is sent to the Legislature explaining the actions. The governor can also line-item veto specific items of appropriation in an appropriations bill and allow the remainder to become law. A two-thirds vote in each house is needed to override a veto (90 votes in the House and 45 votes in the Senate).
- A bill vetoed after the Legislature is adjourned at the end of an odd-numbered year is returned to its house of origin and tabled. The vetoed bill may be taken up after the interim recess when the Legislature reconvenes.
- Special rules apply to bills passed during the last three days before final adjournment in the even-numbered year. The Legislature has three extra days to send the enrolled bill to the governor. The governor then has 14 calendar days following final adjournment to make a decision on a measure. This period includes a three-day period immediately following the session, during which the bill might not have been presented yet. During this period, the governor must sign all bills he or she wishes to become law.

“To be enacted, a bill must pass the Legislature, be signed by the governor or repassed over the governor's veto and filed with the secretary of state, whose office is the permanent custodian of official state documents”

Any bill passed during the last three days of the session that is not signed and deposited with the secretary of state within the 14-day period after final adjournment does not become law. The attorney general routinely reviews all bills passed by the Legislature and advises the governor as to the constitutionality of each measure.

The New Law

To be enacted, a bill must pass the Legislature, be signed by the governor or repassed over the governor's veto and filed with the secretary of state, whose office is the permanent custodian of official state documents.

Acts, except those containing appropriations, take effect on Aug. 1 following enactment unless another date is specified in the act itself. Most appropriations acts take effect on July 1, the beginning of the fiscal year.

Special Sessions

The governor may call the Legislature into special session during the temporary adjournment between the first and second year of a legislative biennium or after final adjournment to take emergency action or to act on important issues left undecided at the close of a regular session.

The governor can suggest the agenda for the session but cannot dictate the measures to be considered or the length of the special session.

A special session is a separate legislative session. It is not a continuation of a regular session. Officers elected for the regular session serve in the special session, and the rules adopted for the regular session remain in effect, unless the body provides otherwise.

A special session has its own records that may be published separately or in conjunction with the records of the preceding regular session.

Any legislation to be considered must follow the same steps that would be required in a regular session.

Gov. Tim Walz addresses the media at a press conference.

Publications

Member-oriented Publications

Minnesota Statutes

Permanent and general laws, which apply to all citizens, are published in bound volumes called Minnesota Statutes and online. Included are laws that apply to: the Legislature; the executive branch, including state departments; the judiciary and courts; tax policy; public safety and police authority; towns, cities and counties; commerce and trade; private property and private rights; civil injuries and remedies; and crimes against people and property and their penalties. Statutes are organized according to subject matter and given numerical coding.

A new set of statutes is printed every two years. Pocket supplements containing changes to the new statutes are printed following the first year of the biennium. The statutes posted on the Internet are updated annually. The online version is available six to eight weeks prior to the book version.

At the beginning of the session, upon request, a member is supplied with an up-to-date set of Minnesota Statutes.

Session Laws of Minnesota

Session Laws are published as a numerical listing of the text of all bills that became law during a legislative session, including appropriations bills, local and temporary bills, proposed constitutional amendments and joint resolutions. Session Laws is also referred to as Laws of Minnesota and Session Laws of the State of Minnesota. They are available online and in bound volumes.

Daily Journal

The daily journals, compiled by the chief clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate, are the official legal records of legislative proceedings.

The state constitution requires that the journal contain a record of all roll-call votes. The journal also records attendance, bill introductions, committee reports and reports of conference committees. The journals contain the text of official communications between the two houses, messages from the governor and protests filed by members. The text of all amendments and motions proposed to the body are included with the actions taken upon them, but no official record is kept of the comments made in debate and discussion. However, sessions are audio taped and filed with the Legislative Reference Library.

Minnesota is a journal-entry state. This means that the journal is the final authority used by the courts concerning actions of the Legislature and in determining legislative intent. Therefore, it is of utmost importance that the journal be complete and accurate.

The journal is printed at the end of each day's session, and copies are available online about two to three hours after daily adjournment. Printed copies of daily journals are available from the Chief Clerk's Office in the Capitol.

Permanent Journals

Each year the daily journals are proofread, corrected, indexed and certified for publication by the chief clerk and the secretary of the Senate.

“Minnesota is a journal-entry state. This means that the journal is the final authority used by the courts concerning actions of the Legislature and in determining legislative intent”

Members, upon request, receive a bound copy of the permanent Journal of the House. Bound copies of the permanent Journal of the Senate are also available to members.
