incitement of terrorism - Incitement with intent to cause bodily harm renders an alien inadmissible under INA if he or she has incited terrorist activity under circumstances indicating an intention to cause death or serious bodily harm. Incited in the context of INA is speech that induces or otherwise moves another person to undertake terrorist activity. Normally speech will not rise to the level of inciting unless there is a clear link between the speech and an actual effort to undertake the terrorist activity. It connotes speech that is not merely an expression of views but that directs or induces action, typically in a volatile situation. The applicant may have incited terrorist activity even if a terrorist attack does not actually occur (e.g., because an attempt to commit such activity was thwarted). An applicant who has incited terrorist activity must also have acted in circumstances indicating an intention to cause death or serious bodily harm to be inadmissible under INA. In other words, the aliens speech must not only have induced others to undertake terrorist activity, but it must also have been made with the specific intent that such activity would result in death or serious bodily injury. Incitement and the requisite intent to cause bodily harm could be inferred in the following situations - (a) Widespread opposition to Country A's policies and actions lead to a series of protests, some violent, outside Country As embassy in Country B. The applicant goes to the embassy, stands on a box, and shouts to the crowd to join him in standing up to Country A and humiliating it. Shortly afterwards, when he sees an embassy vehicle approaching, he yells - Don't let them in! Make them pay for what they have done! The crowd blocks the car and removes occupants (including a diplomat working at Country As embassy), from the car, beating them severely and taking them hostage. Analysis - Diplomatic hostage-taking and violent attacks on diplomats are terrorist activities. Given the aliens urging the crowd to stop the embassy vehicle and make them pay, you would have reasonable ground to believe that the applicants speech incited terrorist activity. The aliens make them pay statement, when viewed against the backdrop of previous violent protests and his general comments about standing up to Country A and humiliating it, would provide you with reasonable ground to believe that the applicant intended to cause death or serious bodily harm. (b) The applicant is an ardent nationalist whose opinions voiced to a particular audience regularly blame foreigners for his country's problems and who argues that the only solution to these problems is that foreigners should be driven out of the country. Press reports say that some of those in the targeted audience have been purchasing weapons and seeking to obtain and manufacture explosives. Police notify the applicant or those associated with the applicant that they are investigating several of those in the targeted audience for weapons-related offenses. At the end of a week of particularly strong anti-foreign sentiment, the applicant gives a special speech entitled A Call to Action. With the knowledge that those under investigation are in the audience, the applicant begins his speech with - The time has come for action! He then reiterates throughout his speech that the only solution to the country's problems is to purge our great land of these foreigners once and for all through whatever means necessary. Shortly thereafter, some of those in the target audience detonate a truck bomb outside a restaurant frequented by foreign nationals, killing several foreign nationals and injuring many restaurant employees. Analysis - The use of any explosive with intent to endanger, directly or indirectly, the safety of one or more individuals or to cause substantial damage to property is a terrorist activity. In the example, the applicant helps foster anti-foreign sentiments and then, during a particularly tense period, urges students to act to drive foreigners from the country through whatever means necessary. Under these circumstances, you would have reasonable ground to believe that the applicants speech incited terrorist activity. The fact that the applicant knew that several students likely had access to weapons and/or explosives and that those students were in attendance at his special lecture would provide you with reasonable ground to believe that the applicant intended to cause death or serious bodily harm.

life-cycle cost - Lease-purchase analyses should compare the net discounted present value of the life-cycle cost of leasing with the full costs of buying or constructing an identical asset. The full costs of buying include the asset's purchase price plus the net discounted present value of any relevant ancillary services connected with the purchase. (Guidance on the discount rate to use for lease-purchase analysis) (2) Economic Life. For purposes of lease-purchase analysis, the economic life of an asset is its remaining or productive lifetime. It begins when the asset is acquired and ends when the asset is retired from service. The economic life is frequently not the same as the useful life for tax purposes. (3) Purchase Price. The purchase price of the asset for purposes of lease-purchase analysis is its fair market value, defined as the price a willing buyer could reasonably expect to pay a willing seller in a competitive market to acquire the asset. (a) In the case of property that is already owned by the Federal Government or that has been donated or acquired by condemnation, an imputed purchase price should be estimated. (b) If public land is used for the site of the asset, the imputed market value of the land should be added to the purchase price. (c) The asset's estimated residual value, as of the end of the period of analysis, should be subtracted from its purchase price. (4) Taxes. In analyzing the cost of a lease, the normal payment of taxes on the lessor's income from the lease should not be subtracted from the lease costs since the normal payment of taxes will also be reflected in the purchase cost. The cost to the Treasury of special tax benefits, if any, associated with the lease should be added to the cost of the lease. Examples of such tax benefits might include highly accelerated depreciation allowances or tax-free financing. (5) Ancillary Services. If the terms of the lease include ancillary services provided by the lessor, the present value of the cost of obtaining these services separately should be added to the purchase price. Such costs may be excluded if they are estimated to be the same for both lease and purchase alternatives or too small to affect the comparison. Examples of ancillary services include: (a) All costs associated with acquiring the property and preparing it for use, including construction, installation, site, design, and management costs. (b) Repair and improvement costs (if included in lease payments). (c) Operation and maintenance costs (if included in lease payments). (d) Imputed property taxes (excluding foreign property taxes on overseas acquisitions except where actually paid). The imputed taxes approximate the costs of providing municipal services such as water, sewage, and police and fire protection. (e) Imputed insurance premiums. (6) Estimating Imputed Costs. Certain costs associated with the Federal purchase of an asset may not involve a direct monetary payment. Some of these imputed costs may be estimated as follows. (a) Purchase Price. An imputed purchase price for an asset that is already owned by the Federal Government or which has been acquired by donation or condemnation should be based on the fair market value of similar properties that have been traded on commercial markets in the same or similar localities. The same method should be followed in estimating the imputed value of any Federal land used as a site for the asset. (b) Property Taxes. Imputed property taxes may be estimated in two ways. (i) Determine the property tax rate and assessed (taxable) value for comparable property in the intended locality. If there is no basis on which to estimate future changes in tax rates or assessed values, the first-year tax rate and assessed value (inflation adjusted for each subsequent year) can be applied to all years. Multiply the assessed value by the tax rate to determine the annual imputation for property taxes. (ii) As an alternative to step (i) above, obtain an estimate of the current local effective property tax rate from the Building Owners and Managers Association's Regional Exchange Reports. Multiply the fair market value of the government-owned property (inflation adjusted for each year) by the effective tax rate. (c) Insurance Premiums. Determine local estimates of standard commercial coverage for similar property from the Building Owners and Managers Association's Regional Exchange Reports.

| objectivity - 1. "Objectivity" includes whether disseminated information is being presented in an accurate, clear, complete, and unbiased manner. This involves whether the information is presented within a proper context. Sometimes, in disseminating certain types of information to the public, other information must also be disseminated in order to ensure an accurate, clear, complete, and unbiased presentation. Also, the agency needs to identify the sources of the disseminated information (to the extent possible, consistent with confidentiality protections) and, in a scientific or statistical context, the supporting data and models, so that the public can assess for itself whether there may be some reason to question the objectivity of the sources. Where appropriate, supporting data should have full, accurate, transparent documentation, and error sources affecting data quality should be identified and disclosed to users. 2. In addition, "objectivity" involves a focus on ensuring accurate, reliable, and unbiased information. In a scientific or statistical context, the original or supporting data must be generated, and the analytical results must be developed, using sound statistical and research methods. 1. If the results have been subject to formal, independent, external peer review, the information can generally be considered of acceptable objectivity. 2. In those situations involving influential scientific or statistical information, the results must be capable of being substantially reproduced, if the original or supporting data are independently analyzed using the same models. Reproducibility does not mean that the original or supporting data have to be capable of being replicated through new experiments, samples, or tests. 3. Making the data and models publicly available will assist in determining whether analytical results are capable of being substantially reproduced. However, these guidelines do not alter the otherwise applicable standards and procedures for determining when and how information is disclosed. Thus, the objectivity standard does not override other compelling interests, such as privacy, trade secret, and other confidentiality protections. | USAID, ADS Glossary, CH 578, May 18 |

| reasonable accommodation - Any change in the work environment or application process that enables a person with a disability to enjoy equal employment opportunities. There are three general categories of reasonable accommodations: (1) changes to a job application process to permit people with disabilities to be considered for jobs; (2) changes that enable people with disabilities to perform the essential functions of a job; and (3) changes that give people with disabilities equal access to the benefits and privileges of employment. Some examples of reasonable accommodation include: Making existing facilities readily accessible, Job restructuring, Modifying work schedules, Acquiring or modifying equipment or devices, Providing qualified readers or interpreters, or Reassignment to a funded, vacant position. Reassignment is the accommodation of last resort. When a determination is made that there is no reasonable accommodation that allows the employee to perform the essential function of his or her current position or if the only effective accommodation in that position causes undue hardship, the Agency must consider reassignment. The Agency must search for a vacant, funded position that the employee qualifies for and may perform the essential functions of the position with or without reasonable accommodation. A vacant position is one that (1) is available when the employee asks for the reasonable accommodation or (2) will become available within a reasonable amount of time. A "reasonable amount of time" is determined on a case-by-case basis considering relevant facts, such as whether it is anticipated that an appropriate position will become vacant within a short period of time. In the absence of a position at the same grade level, the Agency must offer a reassignment to a vacant position, for which the individual is qualified, at the highest available grade level below the employee's current grade or level. The Office/Bureau director and the Director, Office of Human Resources, must be involved in reassignments. | USAID, ADS Glossary, , May 18 |
