

Supplementary materials

Chronic Rhinosinusitis—Microbiological Etiology, Potential Genetic Markers, and Diagnosis

Michał Michalik ^{1,†} and Beata Krawczyk ^{2,*,†}

¹ Medical Center MML, Bagno 2, 00-112 Warsaw, Poland; m.michalik@mml.com.pl

² Department of Biotechnology and Microbiology, Faculty of Chemistry, Gdańsk University of Technology, G. Narutowicza 11/12, 80-233 Gdańsk, Poland

* Correspondence: beata.krawczyk@pg.edu.pl

† These authors contributed equally to this work.

Figure S1. Three cannulas with different angles, contoured at 15, 45 and 120 degrees, respectively for collecting microbiological samples of high-diagnostic specimens from diseased paranasal sinuses.

Figure S2. Use of an angled cannula during the procedure of collecting microbiological samples.