LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL SERVICE INVENTORY OF STATUTORY EXECUTIVE BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

This publication was first created in response to Senate Joint Memorial 46 of the 1995 legislative session, which expressed the legislature's concern over the proliferation of boards and commissions in the executive branch. The Legislative Council Service continues to maintain the inventory as a basic research and information tool for the legislature, the executive and the general public. Readers are strongly encouraged to review the law for specific and more complete information about a particular board or commission. The original purpose of the inventory was to provide information to the legislature about the cost and possible duplication of executive boards and commissions; cost information is no longer compiled, as it becomes outdated too quickly.

Historical Perspective

Prior to 1977, New Mexico had an extremely diffuse executive that included not only several elected officials, but numerous independent boards and commissions. Opponents of a diffuse executive argue that it dilutes the governor's ability to manage; compromises the legislature's appropriation process; and hinders the public's access to accountable, efficient and effective government. The legislature's and the governor's abilities to demand direct and immediate accountability by state employees also may be particularly curtailed when boards made up of citizens determine policy.

The 1977 reorganization of the executive branch was driven in no small part by the proliferation of executive boards, commissions, councils, committees and agencies that muddled lines of authority, diminished the programmatic effect of appropriations, wasted tax dollars, inhibited public access and contravened accountability. That reorganization instituted a cabinet-style executive organization, with most governmental functions assigned to cabinet departments. Most independent boards, commissions and agencies were subsumed under departments that were under the control of cabinet secretaries who were appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate.

However, it was not very long before the state was again faced with a burgeoning executive bureaucracy. In response, the legislature passed Senate Joint Memorial 46 of the 1995 legislature. That memorial requested the New Mexico Legislative Council to name an interim committee to study the consolidation, merger or elimination of executive branch boards and commissions. Believing that basic research was needed before an interim committee could proceed, the New Mexico Legislative Council assigned the Legislative Council Service the task of compiling information on advisory, administratively attached and adjunct boards, commissions, committees, councils and similarly constructed agencies of state government.

Criteria for Inclusion in Inventory

The inventory includes executive boards, commissions, committees and councils that are administratively attached to cabinet departments or that are adjunct or otherwise not under the direct control of the governor, as well as constitutionally created bodies such as the boards of regents, the Public Regulation Commission, the Public Education Commission and the State Transportation Commission. It also includes advisory boards and committees provided for by statute.

Inventory Design

The inventory is divided into subject categories as follows:

- agriculture;
- commerce and industry, which includes economic development and labor;
- cultural affairs;
- education, higher;
- education, other;

- environment and natural resources;
- general government;
- health and human services;
- instrumentalities;
- military affairs;
- professional and occupational boards and commissions;

- (2) organizational status, if provided in statute;
- (3) whether it is a policy or advisory organization;
- (4) whether the legislature has provided rulemaking authority;
- (5) whether the organization is required by federal statute, rule or grant;
- (6) whether senate confirmation is required;
- (7) whether and when the organization sunsets;

(8) funding sources for the organization;

(9) membership, if applicable, and length of terms, appointing authority and other information relative to the body;

(10) the powers and duties of the organization, though the list is not intended to be exhaustive;

(11) whether research can identify duplication, similarity or connections with other governmental entities; and

(12) other pertinent information.

Regulatory authority means the legislature has granted the power to adopt rules.

Federal mandate means a federal law, rule or grant program requires the existence of the entity.

No direct appropriation means the organization is not identified in the general appropriation act.
