16 April 2010

Dear colleagues,

We would like to thank you for your contributions at the last meeting of the Ad hoc Working Group on the revitalization of the General Assembly.

Based on the views expressed at that meeting and after consultations we have conducted as Co-facilitators of the General Assembly revitalization process, we have decided to revise the proposed tentative draft program of 18 March 2010 to allow more time for consideration of issues on the agenda.

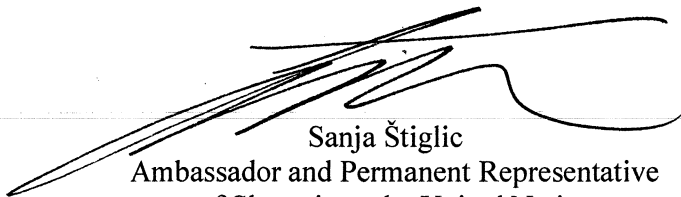

Therefore, we would like to invite all colleagues to our next two meetings scheduled on 26 April and 28 April 2010.

On 26 April 2010, we shall discuss the role and authority of the General Assembly and its relationship to other principal organs of the Organization.

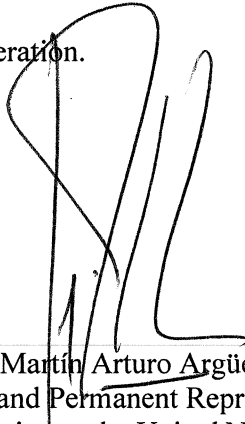

At our second meeting on 28 April 2010 will shall touch upon the question of the role and responsibilities of the General Assembly in the process of selection and appointment of the Secretary-General of the UN.

We would appreciate your participation and we are looking forward to an interactive, productive and constructive discussion on each of the above mentioned areas.

Please accept, Excellencies, the assurances of our highest consideration.

VIEWS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON STRENGTHENING THE INSTITUTIONAL MEMORY OF THE OFFICE OF THE PGA

I. Introduction

1. The General Assembly has frequently reiterated the need to strengthen the role and leadership of the President of the Assembly. To ensure that the President is able to carry out his or her work in a more effective and efficient manner, it is necessary to enhance the institutional memory and reinforce the continuity on which the President and his or her Office base their work.

2. I have had the distinct honor to be elected by the General Assembly to serve as its President for the sixty-fourth session. In accordance with the mandate conferred upon me by resolution 63/309, in which the General Assembly noted “the importance of strengthening the institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly” and invited “the President at the sixty-fourth session to submit his views to the Ad Hoc Working Group at the sixty-fourth session for its consideration”, I am herewith submitting my views to you on how best to strengthen the Office of the Presidency, based on my experience so far. The following provides by way of background a brief overview of the General Assembly as it has evolved in recent years; delineates broadly the functions of the work of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, and the context in which this work is being carried out; and, finally, offers some ideas and recommendations that in my view may be useful in moving this important issue forward.

II. Recent Developments in the Work of the General Assembly

3. As set out in the Charter of the United Nations, the General Assembly plays a key role in addressing the many global challenges confronting the international community. This role has frequently been reaffirmed by the entire membership, including in the Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome, wherein the Heads of State and Government reiterated the role and authority of the General Assembly as the “chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations”.

4. The Assembly’s agenda is ordered under thematic headings that include peace and security to development, development in Africa, the promotion of human rights, humanitarian assistance, international law, disarmament, drug control, crime prevention and combating international terrorism, as well as organizational, administrative and other matters. No other international body is concerned with issues falling under such a wide variety of themes, addressing the most important challenges facing humankind today.

5. Resolutions adopted by consensus on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly during the past seventeen years have stressed the need for the Assembly to play a more active role, including in dealing with issues pertaining to peace and security. The workload of the General Assembly has thus continuously expanded, and is no longer limited to the main part of the session that runs from September to December, but now stretches throughout the session, right up to the opening of the next session. The number of items inscribed on the agenda, 172, at the current session reflects this increased workload. Approximately 250 to 300 resolutions and 80 to 100 decisions are adopted in a session of the General Assembly. Furthermore, there are a number of areas in which the Assembly convenes informal consultations, in one format or the other, ranging from system-wide coherence to the consequences of the global economic and financial crisis, review of the Peacebuilding Commission, human trafficking, reform of the Security Council and, not least, the revitalization and strengthening of its own work.

6. During the sixty-fourth session, Member States are also coming together in the General Assembly in preparation for the High-level Plenary Meetings on the Millennium Development Goals, the sustainable development of Small Island Developing States, and biological diversity, which are to be convened at the opening of the sixty-fifth session. Such high-level meetings have indeed become regular means through which the Assembly addresses many of the most pertinent issues on its agenda.

7. Another area that has contributed to the Assembly's increased activity is the major thematic debates which the membership has asked the President of the General Assembly to "convene and organize in order to establish broad international understanding on current substantive issues of importance to Member States". These debates have provided the membership with a unique opportunity to further dialogue and cooperation and to engage in dynamic and vibrant exchanges of views among Member States, civil society, private sector, and other stakeholders in order to address current challenges of critical importance and universal relevance to the international community. During my Presidency, I have convened several such debates, including on disarmament, water, transnational organized crime and human security, and I intend to convene debates on peacekeeping and the situation in the Middle East.

8. In the context of coordinating the work among the principal organs, I would like to make reference to the monthly meetings that take place between the President of the General Assembly and the rotating Presidency of the Security Council, and about which I have kept the membership informed on a regular basis. The periodic briefings by the Secretary-General on his activities, in the context of informal meetings of the plenary, have also become a practice that is well-received by Member States and should be mentioned as another indicator of the increasing vitality and importance of the role and status of the Assembly. I have also worked very closely with the Secretary-General on a range of issues, and am pleased that my Office has developed excellent cooperation with the Office of the Secretary-General.

III. President of the General Assembly

9. This evolution regarding the Assembly's continuously expanding and increasing workload has necessitated a change in the role played by the President of the General Assembly. While previously it may have been the practice for the President to spend only intermittent periods of time at United Nations Headquarters during the resumed part of the session, i.e. between January and September, it now has certainly become necessary for him or her to be in New York during most of the Presidency, in order to oversee, manage, lead and guide the ongoing work of the General Assembly. This is because the President's role has transformed from merely presiding over meetings, to a deeper and more substantive engagement and contribution to the work of the Assembly. The President, for example, is expected by the membership to lead and facilitate the follow-up processes on substantive mandates, and to help move forward processes when needed. I am thinking, for instance, of the negotiations leading to the adoption of the scale of assessing Member States' dues to the Organization's budget in 2010-2012 and current efforts to bring to a conclusion the ongoing negotiations on system-wide coherence. This role, moreover, is often enshrined in the mandates adopted by the Assembly.

10. To further illustrate this point, following is a list of issues for which I have appointed facilitators during the sixty-fourth session: revitalization of the work of the General Assembly; system-wide coherence; the Millennium Development Goals Summit, Security Council reform; review of the Peacebuilding Commission; review of the Human Rights Council; coordination of efforts against trafficking in persons; the world financial and economic crisis; organization of a World Youth Conference; follow-up and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy regarding the sustainable development of small island states; and marine biological diversity.

11. At the same time, the President also has official, ceremonial and protocol functions to perform, including to represent the body to the outside world. Presidents of the General Assembly, for example, have been encouraged by the Assembly in the past to increase their public visibility. Currently, I receive an average of sixty official visits per month in my Office and am invited to attend, preside over, and participate in international conferences, summits, forums, regional and sub-regional meetings. To increase the public visibility of the Presidents of the General Assembly, as encouraged in resolution 60/286, and at the invitation of Member States, I have also visited many countries in different regions.

12. Managing and guiding the year-round work of the Assembly, including consultations with Member States, follow-up and preparatory processes, the holding of thematic debates, convening of special meetings, and representing the Assembly to the outside world, both here in New York and abroad, therefore, are some of the many additional aspects of the tasks to be discharged by the President of the General Assembly today.

IV. Office of the President of the General Assembly

13. The Office of the President of the General Assembly supports the President in the discharge of his or her responsibilities. As the Assembly's workload has evolved, the role of the Office has also changed over time to become more substantive and expert in nature. As noted, a key responsibility of the President is now to facilitate intergovernmental negotiations on a wide range of issues related to the work of the Assembly. The Office provides substantive backstopping support to this work and to the facilitators appointed to support these processes. Such a role requires that a group of experts work closely with the President, to provide informed analysis and expert advice.

14. In addition to providing professional, expert advice, the Office of the President of the General Assembly undertakes the daily coordinating functions that are required in the performance of the President's tasks, including liaising with Member States, Committee Chairs, and Co-Chairs of various processes, as well as with the Office of the Secretary-General, and the different Departments and Offices in the Secretariat, and the entire range of funds, programmes and agencies of the UN system. The Office also interacts with civil society, non-governmental organizations, and the media.

15. The day-to-day administrative work of the Office of the President of the General Assembly is supported by the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management (DGACM) in the Secretariat, which provides meeting planning, conference management and servicing, as well as translation and interpretation functions. The General Assembly and ECOSOC Affairs Division (GAEAD), which is located within DGACM, provides technical assistance and administrative advice on the orderly and effective conduct of the deliberations and follow-up actions of the General Assembly, amongst other issues. GAEAD also supports the President and the Office by drafting the Assembly's agenda and processing draft resolutions, and by providing essential support during meetings, including advice on the application of the relevant rules of procedure.

16. Given the General Assembly's invitation to submit my views on strengthening the institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, below are some key areas for consideration, followed by recommendations in this regard.

(a) Regular Budget

17. In 1998 Member States adopted resolution 52/221 whereby a budget of 250.000 US dollars for each year of the Organization's biennial budget was established to "enhance further the ability of the President of the General Assembly to discharge his responsibilities". Since then, for almost 12 years, this budget has neither been reviewed nor increased, except for inflation adjustments. It is noteworthy to mention, however, that the budget of the Organization itself has tripled since 1998.

(b) Staffing of the Office of the President of the General Assembly

18. In my view, continuity and institutional knowledge, as well as diverse geographical representation, are important elements in staffing the Office of the President of the General Assembly. Historically, the staff turnover of the Office has been high, which makes it difficult to maintain the institutional memory and knowledge of the Office.

19. The figures of the staffing of the Office of the President are publicly available in relevant official documents. Four regular budget 100 series posts (2 D-2, 1 D-1 and 1 P-5 Adviser) and one General Service Staff Member are provided from within the Organization's budget on an annual basis to the Office. In my Cabinet, the staff on these posts all have a long history of experience with the United Nations, with two of these staff members, including the Chef de Cabinet, being long-term staff of the UN Secretariat. To ensure geographical balance, the staff on these posts represent an international team, with staff coming from Europe, North America, Asia and Africa. None of the staff on these posts hold the same nationality as myself.

20. Two DGACM General Service staff members are assigned to the Office. I would also like to inform you that GAEAD currently has two posts (1 P-4 and 1 P-3) to support the work of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, both of whom retain their offices within GAEAD.

21. Additional support comes from staff seconded by Member States. Recent Presidents have also appointed a number of senior advisors on specific issues, often directly linked to the announced priorities of the Presidency.

(c) Safety and Security

22. The President's security is ensured by a detail of two security officers on a routine basis, and only one during his or her travels in support of official functions. The travel expenses for the security personnel who support the official functions of the President are covered by the budget of the Office of the President of the General Assembly. It is important to mention, however, that given the Office's limited budget, the expenses for security personnel put a great and unsustainable burden on the resources of the Office.

(d) Protocol

23. Currently the Office of the President is not receiving protocol support, which can undermine the status and the dignity of the Office. The General Assembly requested the Secretary-General in resolution 59/313 to ensure that the President of the General Assembly is provided with proper protocol services at Headquarters and abroad. Pursuant to this request, the Secretary-General noted in a statement of programme budget implications that the "full-time provision of a dedicated protocol officer for the President of the General Assembly is currently not possible owing to the insufficient capacity of the Protocol and Liaison Service. Accordingly, a new P-3 post dedicated to the provision of proper protocol services would be required." (Para. 6, A/C.5/59/35). In considering this statement, the Fifth Committee noted that should the General Assembly adopt draft resolution A/59/L.69/Rev.1, additional resources for up to $116,300 will be required, and that these additional requirements will be considered by the General Assembly in the context of its review of the proposed program budget for 2006-2007 (A/59/912). This issue requires urgent attention and follow-up.

(e) Department of Public Information

24. Resolution 64/96 notes the efforts of the Department of Public Information (DPI) to continue to publicize the work and decisions of the General Assembly, and requests the Department to continue to enhance its working relationship with the Office of the President of the General Assembly. Resolution 60/286 encourages the Secretary-General to continue the practice of providing to the Office of the President of the General Assembly a Spokesperson for the President of the General Assembly and an assistant to the Spokesperson.

25. DPI assists the Office in the selection process of a Spokesperson for the Office, with the final decision resting with the President. The selected Spokesperson is seconded by DPI. A webmaster, whose post is charged against the Secretariat budget, is also seconded to the Office.

(f) Trust Fund

26. With a view to further strengthening the Office's accountability and transparency, I requested the Secretary-General to establish a Trust Fund in support of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, as a vehicle through which Member States and others, in accordance with the financial rules and regulations of the Organization, may support and contribute to the efforts of both the presidency specifically and the Assembly more broadly, especially as regards the preparatory process of the thematic debates which the President has been encouraged by the Assembly to convene. I am pleased that the Fund has now been established, and it is my hope that Member States will avail themselves of the opportunity this Fund offers to enhance the visibility of both the Assembly and the Presidency.

(g) Office Space

27. In resolution 59/313 the General Assembly decided to make available to the President of the General Assembly adequate office and conference space with a view to enabling the President to carry out his or her functions in a manner commensurate with the dignity and stature of the Office. As part of the on-going Capital Master Plan, the Office of the President of the General Assembly relocated to the North Lawn Building. It should be noted that, even with the space that has been provided, the current facilities are far from commensurate with the dignity and stature of the Office of the President and work is underway to address this concern. Another factor impacting the Office is the relocation of GAEAD/DGACM outside the campus, which causes challenges for the communication and work that the Office undertakes with this Division in particular.

V. Recommendations

28. Following from my views and observations, which, pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 63/309, I outlined above, I wish to offer a number of recommendations which, I hope, will provide an impetus for the further strengthening of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, including the important pillar of institutional memory.

- As regards financial and general support for the activities of the Presidency, Member States are invited to consider reviewing the budget allocation to the Office of the President of the General Assembly, which, as noted, has not been revised since 1998;
- Given that the Office of the President of the General Assembly represents all Member States, I encourage the geographical balance of General Assembly members to be reflected in the composition of the President's Cabinet;
- As regards staffing, in filling the 100 series posts in the Office of the President of the General Assembly, I recommend that future Presidents of the General Assembly pay due consideration to the selection criteria applied by the United Nations. The Secretariat should advise the President on the various categories of personnel used by the Office of the President of the General Assembly and the applicable United Nations Rules and Regulations;
- It may be considered that, in the interest of enhancing the institutional memory and reinforcing the continuity on which the President and his or her Office base their work, one or more staff members be retained from the preceding office in the incoming President's Cabinet;
- Given that the President of the General Assembly's interactions and meetings take place at the highest diplomatic and political levels, I urge resolution on the provision of mandated services by Protocol and Liaison Services to the Office of the President of the General Assembly;
- I would urge that resolution be reached on the financing of security coverage for the President and office space, and I call on both Member States and relevant Departments of the Secretariat to lend their support to this effort. I also thank the Department of Safety and Security for absorbing the travel expenses for the security personnel who support the official functions of the President overseas since March 2010, and I strongly encourage the Department to develop a budget line to cover the cost of security support for the President, given the unsustainable burden these costs place on the Office of the President of the General Assembly;

- To further ensure continuity between Presidencies, the practice of preparing lessons learned accounts by the outgoing Presidency, including a status report, should be strongly encouraged; and
- Finally, I urge Member States to support the Office of the President of the General Assembly substantively through experts and by giving financial support to the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General.

Updated inventory/chart of General Assembly resolutions on revitalization	14

I. Introduction

1. By its resolution 62/276, the General Assembly decided to establish, at its sixty-third session, an ad hoc working group on the revitalization of the General Assembly, open to all Member States:

(a) To identify further ways to enhance the role, authority, effectiveness and efficiency of the Assembly, inter alia, by building on previous resolutions;

(b) To submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its sixty-third session.

2. The present report and the recommendations contained herein are submitted pursuant to that resolution.

3. During the sixty-third session of the General Assembly, on 20 March 2009, the President of the General Assembly appointed two Co-Chairs of the Working Group, Ambassador Maria Fernanda Espinosa, Permanent Representative of Ecuador to the United Nations, and Ambassador Morten Wetland, Permanent Representative of Norway to the United Nations.

4. Before formally beginning its work, the Working Group's Co-Chairs conducted informal meetings with various Member States and representatives of different political groupings. During those meetings, the Co-Chairs benefited extensively from the insights and ideas of Member States on both the substance and the technical and procedural aspects of the revitalization process.

II. Proceedings

5. The Working Group held eight meetings: on 15 April, 3, 5 and 19 June, 27 July and 8 and 10 September 2009.

6. The programme of work was organized in three practical stages: (a) general discussion and exchange of views; (b) thematic meetings; and (c) briefings. At each of those stages, delegates identified ways to further enhance the role, authority, effectiveness and efficiency of the General Assembly.

A. General discussion

7. At its 1st meeting, on 15 April, the Working Group held a general discussion on the revitalization of the General Assembly, in the course of which 20 Member States intervened, including on behalf of various political groups.

8. In their opening remarks, the Co-Chairs thanked their predecessors from the sixty-second session for their important work and achievements which, they said, would form the basis for the current session's work. They recalled that only a strong General Assembly could help strengthen multilateralism and that their work would be based on the principles of transparency and inclusiveness.

9. Following remarks from the President of the General Assembly, which were read out on his behalf by the Co-Chairs, speakers welcomed the appointment of the Co-Chairs.

10. During the discussion, delegations touched upon many pertinent problems, including: relations between the main organs of the United Nations (particularly between the General Assembly and the Security Council); the timely issuance of reports; the importance of reducing the printing and distribution of official documents (as well as related costs); the importance of thematic debates; the visibility of the Assembly; the use and amelioration of voting and balloting technology; the processes of appointing the Secretary-General and electing the President of the General Assembly; and the role of the President of the General Assembly. Generally, however, delegations agreed that, in order to move the process of General Assembly revitalization forward, the Ad Hoc Working Group should agree on a few specific issues and focus on achieving tangible results on them. On each of the issues mentioned, however, Member States supported the approach offered by the Co-Chairs of focusing on assessment of the implementation of past General Assembly resolutions on revitalization, feeling that an effective and fair assessment of the status of implementation was identified as vital to further progress.

11. Regarding the implementation of resolutions, many speakers welcomed the chart on the status of implementation prepared by the Ad Hoc Working Group at the sixty-second session (see A/62/952/Add.1), which they agreed should form the basis for the current session's deliberations. Many speakers also underlined that the Working Group could consider undertaking an analysis of the reasons for non-implementation of previously adopted resolutions in its remit. One delegation proposed that each General Assembly session should be opened with a debate on the status of implementation of its own resolutions, while another thought implementation of resolutions should form the exclusive focus of the Working Group's work.

12. Many delegations underlined that revitalization was a political process whose principal objective was to strengthen the role of the General Assembly as the main deliberative, policymaking and representative organ of the United Nations, and to counter attempts to undermine that role, including through perceived encroachment. Other speakers stressed that the goal of the exercise should be to render the work of the Assembly more efficient and effective, including through improving its working methods and adjusting its agenda to the current global realities.

13. Numerous delegations suggested that the Assembly's role in the selection process of the Secretary-General should be enhanced, and many regretted that provisions to that effect contained in previous resolutions had not yet been fully implemented.

14. The strengthening of the Office of the President of the General Assembly was mentioned by a number of delegations as a possible focus of the Ad Hoc Working Group. A greater role by the Assembly as a whole in the process of electing its Presidents was also flagged. In order to facilitate the transition process from one President to the next, the proposal was made that each President draft a best practices paper for his or her successor.

15. Balance among the principal organs, and particularly with the Security Council, given what many delegations perceived as encroachment on the work of the General Assembly, was an important point that needed to be addressed. That, a number of delegations argued, included making the Council more accountable to the Assembly and aligning their work programmes. It was also pointed out that the relationship between the General Assembly and the Security Council was also considered in the context of the intergovernmental negotiations on Security Council reform. One delegation suggested focusing also on the General Assembly's relationship with the Peacebuilding Commission.

16. Several speakers cited modernization of the voting system in the General Assembly as an important subject that could lead to a specific outcome. A number of them indicated its possible referral to the Fifth Committee for consideration there in the context of the Capital Master Plan. The possibility of the introduction of optical disc scanners needed to be borne in mind, guided as well by the considerations of security and confidentiality.

17. In his concluding remarks, the Permanent Representative of Norway announced that a workplan would be drafted, based on careful study and consideration of the interventions and comments made by Member States.

18. As a result of these deliberations, the Co-Chairs, in a letter dated 29 May 2009, circulated a workplan proposing three thematic meetings focusing on those issues most frequently cited as issues considered to be most central to the General Assembly's revitalization process:

1. "Implementation of General Assembly resolutions and the agenda; operational and technical issues, including information on the General Assembly voting system, in the framework of the Capital Master Plan";
2. "The role of the General Assembly and its relationship to the other principal organs of the organization and the visibility and public outreach capacity of the Assembly; the role and responsibility of the General Assembly in the process of appointing Secretaries-General of the United Nations";
3. "Strengthening the institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly and enhancing its functions and relationship with the Secretariat."

B. Thematic meetings

I. "Implementation of General Assembly resolutions and the General Assembly agenda; operational and technical issues, including information on the General Assembly voting system, in the framework of the Capital Master Plan"

19. The first thematic meeting, as indicated in the workplan, was held on 3 June. Nine delegations, some also speaking on behalf of groups, intervened in discussions on the issues indicated above.

20. On the implementation of resolutions pertaining to the revitalization of the General Assembly, the view was expressed that over the years a sufficient number of proposals had been adopted by the Assembly and that Member States should now focus on their implementation. In this context, several speakers again underlined that the chart developed by the previous Ad Hoc Working Group during the sixty-second session would be a good basis for that effort. While some thought that the Secretary-General should be requested to update the chart on a regular basis, including an indication of reasons for non-implementation, one delegation suggested that review of the implementation of resolutions should be undertaken only every four to five years. Of those in favour of continuing the review exercise, some indicated that it could be beneficial to consider, at the outset, modalities for such a review. It was also thought by some that information on the implementation of Assembly resolutions should also become an integral feature of the Secretary-General's annual report.

21. Regarding the question of the agenda of the General Assembly, several speakers argued that the best way to revitalize the Assembly would be for it to facilitate consideration of the most pressing contemporary concerns of relevance to all Member States as well as the international community as a whole. A number of speakers also suggested that a streamlining of the agenda could be beneficial, so that the many imminent crises and new challenges that had come to the forefront of the international political agenda in recent years could be more fully and effectively addressed. Many Member States indicated willingness in principle to approach the challenge of the agenda of the General Assembly, while at the same time clearly underlining their awareness of the political sensitivity of any such undertaking. A number of delegations recalled the efforts that had been made on that issue in the course of previous sessions, particularly the fifty-eighth session, of the Assembly, and the results that had been obtained from them. The possibility of the elimination, biennialization, triennialization, etc., of items was cited. One proposal put forward was to consider a sunset clause for agenda items.

22. In the wider context of the Assembly's agenda, the use of thematic debates was also addressed by many Member States. There was widespread agreement on the importance of holding these debates on issues of relevance to the international community and of concern and interest to the Organization. It was also noted that their themes and timing should be decided in consultation with Member States, and that they should be well prepared so as not to overload the agenda of the Assembly. Some delegations proposed that future thematic debates should be more results-oriented and be tied to emerging issues. Thematic debates could lead to the adoption of a resolution or the establishment of an open-ended working group on the issue discussed, and a list of proposals made by Member States during their thematic discussions could be drafted accordingly. Another delegation, while generally supportive of the important role played by thematic debates, expressed concern over duplication of discussions with those in other bodies (e.g. the Fifth Committee).

23. At the same meeting, several speakers intervened on the voting system in the General Assembly, offering a variety of views and comments, including the following: a group of Member States requested further information on voting systems; other delegations shared the view that it would be useful to hear a follow-up briefing on voting systems; a delegation suggested requesting the Assistant Secretary-General and Chief Information Technology Officer to provide information on the latest voting technology available and asked which system would be in place during the implementation of the Capital Master Plan; another delegation argued that empirical data was required to aid Member States in making a decision on the various options for a new voting system; a delegation proposed to refer the issue to the Fifth Committee and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ); several Member States wanted to improve the existing system of counting ballots by hand, whereas one associated delegation added, in its national capacity, that it was in favour of making full use of new technology; another delegation was not opposed to new technology if it could be implemented from within existing resources; yet another delegation suggested it would be extremely easy to implement option A (utilizing optical scanners) to achieve improvements right away.

24. In other remarks, the issue of documentation was raised by a group of countries which emphasized the importance of the timely issuance of documents in all six official languages as well as measures to improve the quality and accuracy of documents, and requested clarification from the Secretariat on the possible savings that could accrue from reduction of the distribution of hard copies, assuming that electronic distribution would be quicker, less costly and more environmentally benign.

25. Another group of countries touched upon the role of the Main Committees, namely to explore the possibility of streamlining the Assembly's workload between the main committees and the plenary. And one delegation suggested that there should be no parallel meetings between main committees and the plenary.

II. "The role of the General Assembly and its relationship to the other principal organs of the Organization and the visibility and public outreach capacity of the Assembly; the role and responsibility of the General Assembly in the process of appointing Secretaries-General of the United Nations"

26. At the second thematic meeting, on 5 June, 15 delegations, some again speaking on behalf of various groups, intervened on the issues under discussion.

27. On the relationship between the General Assembly and the other principal organs, the view was expressed by many Member States that the primary objective of General Assembly revitalization was to continue to strengthen the role and position of the General Assembly as the chief deliberative, policymaking and representative organ of the United Nations. References were made by several speakers to the relevant provisions of the Charter setting out the respective bodies' functions and powers.

28. Numerous speakers, however, noted a growing concern over the perceived encroachment on the work of the General Assembly, and some referred to the perceived increased role of the Security Council in the field of norm-setting in this regard. It was noted that past resolutions aimed at increasing coordination among the two bodies existed and only needed to be implemented. Such implementation would include, inter alia, regular meetings among the respective Presidents of the principal organs.

29. There was also some concern that provisions regarding the improvement of the annual report of the Security Council to the General Assembly, as well as provisions regarding the submission of special subject-oriented reports, had not been implemented. In this regard, however, some delegations, noting the improvements made in the annual report of the Security Council, acknowledged that more progress was required. One delegation noted that the Security Council report did not suggest subordination of one body to another, adding that those delegations wishing to receive further details on the Council's work could consult with the respective members elected from within their own regional groups. Views varied among delegations on the extent to which the revitalization and Security Council reform processes were either interdependent or independent of each other.

30. Various delegations expressed their support for increasing the public visibility of the work of the Assembly, which, they argued, was proportional to and a function of the relevance of the issues discussed by it and the way in which it dealt with those issues. Some delegations stated that increased visibility could also be achieved by increasing interaction with civil society or through travel activities by the President and the Vice-Presidents. It was proposed to examine the reasons why the apparent public disconnect with the work of the General Assembly had been growing. On that issue, some delegations indicated that the form of debates in the Assembly could be made significantly more attractive.

31. A group of countries, on the other hand, suggested that the question of public visibility should continue to be considered in the appropriate forum of the Committee on Information. Another delegation, through the Co-Chairs, submitted questions on channels to major media outlets and plans to harness modern media techniques. A paper by the Department of Public Information on these issues requested by Member States was distributed to the Working Group at its third thematic meeting.

32. Several speakers also intervened on the selection process for the Secretary-General, offering a variety of views and comments. While some underscored the importance of retaining the current practice and while some focused on approaching the issue in full compliance with the provisions of the Charter, others suggested that the process had become less transparent and inclusive over time, and that the permanent members of the Security Council had assumed too large a role in it. Many stressed the importance of implementing existing resolutions on the issue and also emphasized the inadequacy of the past selection processes and the need for improvement. In that context, it was indicated by some delegations that it might be useful to reconsider or abolish the provisions contained in resolution 11/1 of 1946 on the appointment of the Secretary-General, and some also stressed that now was the best time to undertake a comprehensive review of the Assembly's role in the process. Some speakers suggested that the Assembly provide a forum for candidates for the post of Secretary-General to express their views and aspirations on their possible tenure.

III. "Strengthening the institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly and enhancing its functions and relationship with the Secretariat"

33. At the third thematic meeting, on 19 June, 10 delegations intervened, some again on behalf of various groups.

34. Those Member States intervening generally agreed with the importance of strengthening the Office of the President of the General Assembly. Some delegations welcomed the measures already adopted in this regard. Other delegations supported increases in both financial and human resources. Many speakers, including two groups participating in the discussions, underlined that priority should be given to the implementation of existing resolutions on those matters. Many, however, noted that those provisions were far from sufficient and that the financial support extended had been stagnating for too many years. One delegation suggested that a specific proposal could be submitted to the Fifth Committee and ACABQ. Others explicitly conditioned support for the strengthening of the Office on its being done within existing resources. Interest was expressed in receiving information updating the situation on staffing and financing of the Office of the President of the General Assembly.¹ In addition, several comments touched on the importance of strengthening the Office's institutional memory, including through strengthening the role of permanent staff, with the understanding that those staff must be accountable to the entire General Assembly. The role and responsibilities of Advisers to the President of the General Assembly was specifically raised in this context.

35. Some delegations stressed the importance of ensuring efficiency in the process of nomination and selection of, and transfer of responsibilities between, Presidents. To strengthen the Office's institutional memory and bolster the smooth transition from one President to the next, several delegations reiterated the usefulness of the incumbent submitting a report to the President-elect of the General Assembly which could include specific recommendations and lessons learned on the working methods of the Office. A number of Member States argued that such an annual report should be shared with the wider membership and one speaker suggested formalizing a request in that regard. Another intervention further noted that the President of the General Assembly should also submit a report on all travel activities undertaken.

36. On a different matter, one group of Member States made the proposal to consider a consultative mechanism for strengthening the interaction between the President of the General Assembly and the Main Committee Chairs, to allow the former to be better informed of the proceedings of and challenges in those Committees.

C. Briefings

37. At the fifth meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group, Member States, in response to questions raised during the thematic meetings, heard two briefings from the Secretariat, on voting/balloting and documentation, respectively, as well as the views of a representative of the United Nations Correspondents Association (UNCA), each of which was followed by an opportunity for the membership to offer questions and engage in discussion with the panellists.

1. Voting and balloting options

38. The Chief of the Facilities Management Unit of the Secretariat, in a power-point presentation on voting/balloting, introduced delegates to components and features of the combined congress microphone, simultaneous interpretation and voting system which had been procured and was being installed under the Capital Master Plan during the third and fourth quarters of 2009 in the conference rooms of the North Lawn Conference Building. That system had been specified to provide the standard required functionality of congress microphone and simultaneous interpretation common to all current established conference rooms at Headquarters and to provide the open voting functionality as currently available in the General Assembly Hall and Conference Rooms 1, 2 and 3 of the Conference Building.

¹ Subsequent to this request, confirmation was received by the co-facilitators that the provisions relating to the staffing and financing of the Office of the President of the General Assembly adopted during the fifty-eighth session remain unchanged. Their status is indicated in cluster III (paras. 35-38) of document A/62/952.

39. The system that is being installed in the North Lawn Conference Building also has available a number of other voting options, in addition to the open electronic voting currently used by the United Nations in the above-mentioned rooms. One of the voting options available on this system is called "closed voting". The power-point presentation demonstrated how this closed voting option could be used for the purpose of balloting. Delegates were also advised that preliminary discussions were being held with the system manufacturer on possibilities of amending or reprogramming the system to provide additional balloting/voting functionality to meet specific needs of certain General Assembly balloting processes for which the system is not yet configured.

40. Several speakers then posed questions on security and confidentiality aspects of the device, also expressing concern as to whether or not it would be guaranteed that votes cast were actually registered. One delegation asked about the provision of back-up in case of technical failure and another delegation wondered whether the tally and display of results would be instantaneous and what impact that could have on conducting multiple rounds of balloting.

41. In response, the Secretariat suggested that the North Lawn Conference Building would provide an opportunity for Member States to test the system's potential and that retailoring to meet security or other concerns could be accommodated and was common in the design, installation and adaptation of modern technology. It was emphasized by the Secretariat that any decisions on those matters would, of course, be subject to the guidance of the membership.

2. Documentation distribution

42. Following the briefing on voting and balloting options, the Director of the Meetings and Publishing Division of the Secretariat briefed Member States on the possibilities of savings that could accrue from reducing distribution of printed documentation. He also pointed out, however, that any decisions to be taken on that matter would need to emanate from the Assembly itself, noting that the Secretariat was in the hands of the membership in that regard and that the level, manner and kind of document printing and distribution would depend upon its decisions.

43. He referred to the annual survey in which Member States are invited to indicate their documentation needs, highlighting that a reduction of document printing and distribution of 3 to 4 per cent a year in each of the past few years had been achieved through their responses to it, even though only roughly 25 per cent of Member States had replied. He also encouraged the continued and even more active participation of Member States in that process, noting that resulting reductions in the printing and distribution of hard copies would be positive, for the budget and for the environment. He also explained that, because the Secretariat was a professional producer of documents, it could produce documents much faster and in a more environmentally sustainable manner than if they were all printed in equally many copies in the various missions. He further highlighted the Secretariat's economies of scale by indicating that printing out documents individually in missions can cost significantly more.

44. At the same time, he strove to underscore the extent of the Secretariat's efforts to enhance electronic and online services to and access by Member States. Noting the increasing ease of access to documents through both the Official Document System (ODS) and the hyperlinks written into the Journal of the United Nations, he also encouraged delegations to participate in the Secretariat's E-Subscription project, which was being designed to enhance their digital access to and retrieval of relevant documents online, and which would, hopefully, lead to fewer hard copies of documents being needed.

3. Media and visibility

45. Subsequently, the representative of the United Nations Correspondents Association (UNCA), shared some insights from the perspective of the journalists covering the Assembly on ways in which they felt coverage of the Assembly and its work could be facilitated. The points she presented were:

(a) Restore the function of Deputy General Assembly Spokesperson to enhance capacity and institutional memory and to give the Spokesperson a longer tenure;

(b) Statements and texts should be delivered to the press documents desk far more quickly;

(c) Relax security to allow better access by and for the media;

(d) Ameliorate the consequences of the Capital Master Plan on the media's work;

(e) Indicate speakers' names and titles on the screen during video/TV transmission of meetings;

(f) Coverage would be sporadic as long as the agenda included items that were perceived as irrelevant to the outside world.

46. The Co-Chairs supplemented the points presented by UNCA with a report of their own on the meeting they had had with UNCA, from which they had taken away valuable lessons. One delegation suggested that it was up to Member States to decide whether and how to follow up on those insights.

47. In subsequent discussion of a synopsis which speakers considered to be a balanced account of the Ad Hoc Working Group's proceedings to date, a number of speakers suggested that it could form a basis for the Working Group's report. Others offered to provide further relevant comments and reactions to the Co-Chairs.

48. On the way forward, various views were expressed: some speakers, reiterating their position of implementing existing resolutions on revitalization, focused on the drafting of the Ad Hoc Working Group's report, while others suggested concentrating, in the Working Group's remaining time, on the drafting of a resolution. Yet others proposed updating the chart of implementation and separating those provisions that had been implemented from those that were still pending. The latter step, they felt, would help the Working Group to identify and structure its priorities better.

49. In other comments, one regional group cautioned that the Ad Hoc Working Group should not duplicate efforts in areas already under consideration in other forums. Another suggested that, based on the proposal to update and divide items in the chart according to their status of implementation, the Group might consider drawing up timetables for various thematic issues. One speaker strongly underlined the need for the Assembly to give high priority and focus to areas of peace and security, as well as to disarmament, which it considered to be important fields for the revitalization of the Assembly, and another, on a similar point, underlined the importance of the Assembly taking up issues of current international relevance, such as the recent example of Honduras.

50. While one delegation stressed that, rather than focusing on the perceived encroachment by the Security Council on the work of the General Assembly, or the appointment process for the Secretary-General, it hoped that the Ad Hoc Working Group could find issues of common concern to the entire membership, such as the election process for the President of the General Assembly. It also stressed the importance of the early issuance of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, citing the positive example of the recent one concerning Honduras; the usual delay in issuance of several weeks was unhelpful. Other speakers focused on the importance of considering the way in which the United Nations goes about appointing its Secretary-General as well as on the General Assembly's relationship with the Security Council in particular.

51. In summarizing remarks, the Permanent Representative of Norway noted that questions had been raised on each of the issues considered at the meeting, including on the security, reliability and testing of voting/balloting machines. The Co-Chairs had also taken note of the distinction submitted by some speakers between technical and political issues. Finally, with regard to questions and comments on the Assembly's visibility, the Co-Chairs were aware of the role of the Committee on Information and assured those present that, insofar as forthcoming documents or conclusions contained new elements of possible interest to it, that Committee could also be apprised of them.

III. Conclusions

52. In accordance with its mandate, the Working Group endeavoured to identify key issues of concern and possible consensus, to examine the current status of implementation with regard to those issues, and either to take or to indicate possible further action to be taken on them.

53. At its eighth meeting, on 10 September 2009, the Ad Hoc Working Group considered and adopted a draft resolution (see para. 55 below) and the present report.

IV. Recommendations

54. On the basis of a draft resolution circulated by the Co-Chairs, the Ad Hoc Working Group developed, at its sixth and seventh meetings, on 8 September 2009, and at its eighth meeting on 10 September 2009, the resolution set out below.

55. At its eighth meeting, on 10 September 2009, the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Revitalization of the General Assembly concluded its work for the sixty-third session of the General Assembly. The Working Group decided to recommend that the General Assembly adopt the following draft resolution:
