All eyes were on Hawkeyes: 14.2M watched Iowa-UConn

By ANDREW BATTIFARANO

when the Hawkeyes fell to LSU in the national title game.

Women's college basketball keeps on setting new television ratings records during the 2024 NCAA Tournament — and this time, it was ESPN's most-viewed basketball broadcast ever.

Less than one week after Iowa's Elite Eight matchup with LSU set the previous record for most-watched women's NCAA basketball game with 12.3 million viewers, the Hawkeyes' Final Four thriller against UConn on Friday garnered 14.2 million viewers, according to ESPN.

The Final Four matchup also peaked at 17 million viewers.

The network also said there was an average of 7.1 million viewers who tuned in to watch undefeated South Carolina beat North Carolina State in its Final Four matchup.

Iowa's past two games have shattered the previous NCAA women's basketball ratings record (9.9 million viewers) that was set last year

Those who tuned into Friday's Iowa-UConn Final Four saw quite the game, with the Huskies containing Caitlin Clark in the first half before she and Iowa rallied to take a late lead — holding a one-point edge in the waning seconds before controversy set in.

With 10 seconds to go and trailing by one, UConn ran a play to try and get star Paige Bueckers open, but Aaliyah Edwards was called for an illegal screen on Iowa's Gabbie Marshall, all but closing out an Iowa win.

After Clark sunk a free throw on the other end, the Hawkeyes sealed a 71-69 victor and a second straight berth in the national title game.

With a Clark taking on a loaded South Carolina team, there's a chance that the championship game on Sunday afternoon could set another ratings record.
