

De-Demonising the Old Testament

An Investigation of Azazel, Lilith, Deber, Qeteb and Reshef in the Hebrew Bible

Judit M. Blair

Doctor of Philosophy
University of Edinburgh

2008

Declaration

I declare that the present thesis has been composed by me, that it represents my own research, and that it has not been submitted for any other degree or professional qualification.

Judit M. Blair

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

There are many people to thank and acknowledge for their support and help over the past years.

Firstly I would like to thank the School of Divinity for the scholarship and the opportunity they provided me in being able to do this PhD.

I would like to thank my ‘numerous’ supervisors who have given of their time, energy and knowledge in making this thesis possible:

To Professor Hans Barstad for his patience, advice and guiding hand, in particular for his ‘adopting’ me as his own. For his understanding and help with German I am most grateful. To Dr Peter Hayman for giving of his own time to help me in learning Hebrew, then accepting me to study for a PhD, and in particular for his attention to detail. To Professor Nick Wyatt who supervised my Masters and PhD before his retirement for his advice and support.

I would also like to thank the staff at New College Library for their assistance at all times, and Dr Jessie Paterson and Bronwen Currie for computer support.

My fellow colleagues have provided feedback and helpful criticism and I would especially like to thank all members of HOTS-lite I have known over the years.

I would like to thank the School of Divinity for the financial support through the Postgraduate Students Conference and Research Expenses Award that enabled me to attend and present at various conferences.

And, last but not least, I would like to thank my family and friends, my husband’s parents for ‘babysitting’ so frequently and especially my mother-in-law for her stamina in ironing; my own parents for their support, even at such a distance; my brother for his continuing support and help with all matters technical.

My greatest debt of gratitude goes to my husband, Stuart, who supported me emotionally and financially, and was always willing to read my work and offer critical advice.

I would like to thank him for always ‘being there’, and my three daughters, Sarah, Zsófia and Anna, for sometimes ‘not being there’ and allowing me to work!

ABSTRACT

The subject of demons and demonology has fascinated scholars and non-scholars, ancient and modern alike; it is not surprising that much work has been done on the topic by biblical scholars too.

Chapter 1 places the present study within the existing scholarship showing that the early works on 'OT demonology' were influenced by comparative religion, anthropology, and an increasing interest in Mesopotamian and Canaanite parallels as well as a concern to seek and find vestiges of ancient religious beliefs in the Old Testament.

The consensus of early 20th century scholars regarding what constitutes a 'demon' in the Old Testament has not been challenged by modern scholarship. Chapter 2 shows that biblical scholars still commonly turn to the ancient Near Eastern religions and cultures to explain difficult passages in the Hebrew Bible, to find parallels or the 'original' of difficult terms and concepts.

Since it is generally accepted without challenge that azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef are the personal names of 'demons' appearing in the Hebrew Bible, the necessity arises to return to the texts in order to examine each term in its context. The present study seeks to answer the question whether these five terms are names of 'demons' in the Hebrew texts as we have them today.

To accomplish its goal the present study will provide an exegesis based on Close Reading of all the relevant biblical passages in which the terms azazel (chapter 3), lilith (chapter 4), deber (chapter 5), qeteb (chapter 6), and reshef (chapter 7) appear. Attention is paid to the linguistic, semantic, and structural levels of the texts. The emphasis is on a close examination of the immediate context in order to determine the function (and if possible the meaning) of each term. The reading focuses on determining how the various signals within the text can guide towards meaning, noting how the (implied) poet/author uses the various poetical/rhetorical devices, especially personification, but also parallelism, similes, irony, and mythological elements.

The present study shows that contrary to former and current scholarship there is nothing in the texts to support the view that azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef are the names of 'demons'. Azazel appears as the personification of the forces of chaos that threaten the order of creation; his role is to stand in contrast to Yahweh. The context requires that lilith is regarded as a bird, a night bird being the most plausible explanation of the term. Deber, qeteb and reshef are personifications of destructive forces and appear as agents of Yahweh, members of his 'Angels of Evil' who bring punishment (death) on the people of Israel for disobedience. There is no evidence to suggest that there are mythological figures behind azazel, lilith or the personifications of deber and qeteb. In case of reshef there is a possible connection to the Semitic deity Reshef. However, the mythological motifs are used merely as a poetic device.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

DECLARATION	ii
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	iii
ABSTRACT	iv
TABLE OF CONTENTS	v
ABBREVIATIONS	ix
CHAPTER 1: INTRODUCTORY REMARKS – PLACE, AIM AND METHOD OF STUDY	1
1.1 The place of the present study within existing scholarship	1
1.2 A survey of ‘OT demonology’	2
1.3 Summary observations and implications	12
1.4 Aim of the present study	13
1.5 Methodological and procedural remarks	14
1.6 Results of investigation	16
CHAPTER 2: HISTORY OF RESEARCH OF AZAZEL, LILITH, DEBER, QETEB AND RESHEF	17
2.1 Introduction	17
2.2 The interpretation of Azazel	17
2.2.1 Etymology and the ancient Near East	19
2.2.2 Intertestamental Literature: The Book of Enoch	23
2.2.3 Evidence in the Hebrew Bible?	25
2.2.4 Summary azazel	25
2.3 The interpretation of lilith in the Hebrew Bible	26
2.3.1 Lilith in the ancient Near East and post-biblical Judaism	27
2.3.2 Summary lilith	31
2.4 History of research on deber	32
2.4.1 Deber in the ancient Near East	34
2.4.1.1 Ebla	34
2.4.1.2 Ugarit	35
2.4.2 Summary deber	37
2.5 History of research on qeteb	37
2.5.1 Qeteb in the ancient Near East and post-biblical Judaism	40
2.5.1.1 Assyria	40
2.5.1.2 Ugarit	41
2.5.1.3 Post-biblical Judaism	42
2.5.2 Summary qeteb	43

2.6	History of research on reshef	44
2.6.1	Ebla	44
2.6.2	Egypt	45
2.6.3	Ugarit	46
2.6.4	Phoenician and Aramaic evidence	48
2.6.5	The interpretation of reshef	49
2.6.6	Summary reshef	56
2.7	Conclusion to History of research of azazel , lilith , deber , qeteb and reshef	57
CHAPTER 3: AZAZEL IN THE HEBREW BIBLE		59
3.1	Introduction	59
3.2	Leviticus 16: 8, 10 and 26	59
3.3	Conclusion of azazel	66
CHAPTER 4: LILITH IN CONTEXT. AN EXAMINATION OF TERMS RELATED TO IT IN ISAIAH 34 AND OTHER CONTEXTS		68
4.1	Introduction	68
4.2	Isaiah 34	68
4.2.1	Isa 34:1-7	69
4.2.2	Isa 34: 8-13b	73
4.2.2.1	קָפֹד and קָאֵת	76
4.2.2.2	עֵרֵב and יְנִשׁוּף	78
4.2.3	Isa 34:13c-15	78
4.2.3.1	תַּנִּים	79
4.2.3.2	בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה	82
4.2.3.3	אֲיִים and צִיִּים	84
4.2.3.4	The שְׁעִיר	86
4.2.3.4.1	Leviticus 17:7	87
4.2.3.4.2	2 Chronicles 11:5	89
4.2.3.4.3	2 Kings 23:8	92
4.2.3.5	לִילִית	98
4.2.3.6	דְּיוֹת and קַפּוּז	100
4.2.4	Isa 34:16-17	102
4.3	Conclusion of lilith	102
CHAPTER 5: DEBER IN THE HEBREW BIBLE		104
5.1	Introduction	104
5.2	Passages generally considered to contain Deber as a demon	105
5.2.1	Psalms 91:1-6	105
5.2.2	Hosea 13:1-14:1	109
5.2.3	Habakkuk 3:5	113
5.2.4	Summary of deber in Ps 91, Hos 13 and Hab 3	117

5.3	Deber in Jeremiah	118
5.3.1	Jeremiah 14:12	119
5.3.2	Jeremiah 21:6, 7 and 9	123
5.3.3	Jeremiah 24: 10	127
5.3.4	Jeremiah 27:8, 13 and Jer 28:8	128
5.3.5	Jeremiah 29:17, 18	131
5.3.6	Jeremiah 32: 24, 36	132
5.3.7	Jeremiah 34: 17	134
5.3.8	Jeremiah 38:2	136
5.3.9	Jeremiah 42: 17, 22 and 44:13	136
5.3.10	Summary of occurrences of deber in Jeremiah	137
5.4	Deber in Ezekiel	139
5.4.1	Ezekiel 5:12 and 17	139
5.4.2	Ezekiel 6:11 and 12	144
5.4.3	Ezekiel 7:15	146
5.4.4	Ezekiel 12:16 (1-16)	148
5.4.5	Ezekiel 14:19 and 21	149
5.4.6	Ezekiel 28:23	152
5.4.7	Ezekiel 33:27 (33:23-29)	154
5.4.8	Ezekiel 38:22	157
5.4.9	Summary of occurrences of deber in Ezekiel	163
5.5	Other occurrences of deber	164
5.5.1	Exodus 5:3	164
5.5.2	Exodus 9:3, 15	168
5.5.3	Leviticus 26:25	171
5.5.4	Deuteronomy 28:21	174
5.5.5	Numbers 14:12	177
5.5.6	2 Samuel 24:13-15 // 1 Chronicles 21:12-14	179
5.5.7	1 Kings 8:37 and 2 Chronicles 6:28	183
5.5.8	2 Chronicles 7: 13	185
5.5.9	2 Chronicles 29:9	186
5.5.10	Psalm 78:49-50	187
5.5.11	Amos 4:10	189
5.5.12	Summary of other occurrences of deber	192
5.6	Conclusion of deber	193

CHAPTER 6: QETEB IN THE HEBREW BIBLE 195

6.1	Introduction	195
6.2	Psalm 91:6	195
6.3	Hosea 13:14	196
6.4	Deuteronomy 32	196
6.5	Isaiah 28	203
6.6	Conclusion of qeteb	211

CHAPTER 7: RESHEF IN THE HEBREW BIBLE	214
7.1 Introduction	214
7.2 Deuteronomy 32:24	214
7.3 Habakkuk 3	215
7.4 Psalm 78:48	215
7.5 Psalm 76:4	216
7.6 Job 5:7	221
7.7 Canticles 8:6	229
7.8 Conclusion of reshef	233
MAIN CONCLUSION OF INVESTIGATION	235
APPENDIX I: RESHEF IN THE RITUAL TEXTS OF UGARIT	240
BIBLIOGRAPHY	256

ABBREVIATIONS

Periodicals, Reference Works, Serials

AB	Anchor Bible
ABD	Anchor Bible Dictionary , 6 vols, ed. by D. N. Freedman (New York: Doubleday, 1992)
AION	Annali, Istituto Universitario Orientale di Napoli, Nuova Serie
ANET	Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament , ed. by J. B. Pritchard, 3 rd edn (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969)
AnOr	Analecta orientalia
AOAT	Alter Orient und Altes Testament
AOS	American Oriental Series
ARTU	An Anthology of Religious Texts from Ugarit , J. C. De Moor (Leiden: Brill, 1987)
BA	Biblical Archaeologist
BASOR	Bulletin of the American Society of Oriental Research
BDB	The Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew and English Lexicon: with an appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic , F. Brown, S. R. Driver and Ch. Briggs, 5 th printing (Peabody: Hendrickson, 2000)
BHS	Biblia hebraica stuttgartensia
Bib	Biblica
CAD	The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago , ed. by I. J. Gelb et al. (Chicago: Oriental Institute, 1964-)
CBQ	Catholic Biblical Quarterly
DCH	Dictionary of Classical Hebrew , 6 vols ed. by D. J. A. Clines (Sheffield Academic Press, 1993-2007)
DDD	Dictionary of Deities and Demons in the Bible , ed. by K. van der Toorn, B. Becking, P. W. van der Horst, 2 nd extensively rev. edn, (Leiden: Brill, 1999)
DUL	A Dictionary of the Ugaritic Language in the Alphabetic Tradition , 2 vols, G. del Olmo Lete and J. Sanmartin, transl. by W. G. E. Watson (Leiden: Brill, 2003)
EncJud	Encyclopaedia Judaica , C. Roth and G. Wigader eds. in chief, 16 vols (Jerusalem: Keter Publ. House Ltd., 1971-72)
EncRel ¹	The Encyclopedia of Religion , 1 st edn, M. Eliade, ed. in chief, 16vols (New York: Macmillan, 1987)
EncRel ²	Encyclopedia of Religion , 2 nd edn, L. Jones, ed. in chief, 15 vols (Detroit: Thomson Gale, 2005)
EQ	Evangelical Quarterly
GDS	Gods, Demons and Symbols of Ancient Mesopotamia: An Illustrated Dictionary , J. Black and A. Green (London: British Museum Press, 1992)
GELS	A Greek-English Lexicon of the Septuagint: Chiefly of the Pentateuch and the Twelve Prophets , Muraoka, T (Louvain: Peeters, 2002)
HALOT	Hebrew and Aramaic Lexicon of the Old Testament , ed. by L. Koehler and W. Baumgartner, study edn, 2 vols (Leiden: Brill, 2001)

HSM	Harvard Semitic Monographs
IDB	Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible , 4vols (New York: Nashville, 1962)
IDBSuppl	Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible , Supplementary Volume
JAAR	Journal of the American Academy of Religion
JAOS	Journal of the American Oriental Society (New Haven)
JBL	Journal of Biblical Literature
JNES	Journal of Near Eastern Studies
JNWSL	Journal of North-West Semitic Languages
JPS	Jewish Publication Society
JSJ	Journal for the Study of Judaism
JSOT	Journal for the Study of the Old Testament
JSOTSuppl	Journal for the Study of the Old Testament Supplement Series
JSS	Journal of Semitic Studies
KTU	The Cuneiform Alphabetic Texts from Ugarit, Ras Ibn Hani and other Places , M. Dietrich, O. Loretz, and J. Sanmartin, 2 nd enlarged edn (Münster: Ugarit – Verlag, 1995)
NIDOTTE	New International Dictionary of Old Testament Theology and Exegesis , 5 vols (Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 1997)
OBO	Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis
Or	Orientalia
OTP	Old Testament Pseudepigrapha
PEQ	Palestine Exploration Quarterly
RA	Revue d'assyriologie et d'archéologie Orientale
RHR	Revue de l'histoire des religions
RS	Ras Shamra
RTU	Religious Texts from Ugarit , N. Wyatt, 2 nd rev. edn (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002)
SBL	Society of Biblical Literature
SJLA	Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity
SJOT	Scandinavian Journal of the Old Testament
SSS	Semitic Studies Series
TDOT	Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament , rev. edn, ed. by G. J. Botterweck and H. Ringgren, transl. by J. T. Willis, 12 vols (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977-2003)
TGUOS	Transactions of the Glasgow University Oriental Society
ThZ	Theologische Zeitschrift
TLOT	Theological Lexicon of the Old Testament , 2 vols, ed. by E. Jenni and C. Westermann, English transl. by M. E. Biddle (Hendrickson Pub. 1997)
TWOT	Theological Wordbook of the Old Testament (Bibleworks 6)
UF	Ugarit-Forschungen
VT	Vetus Testamentum
VTSuppl	Vetus Testamentum Supplement Series
WBC	Word Biblical Commentary
ZA	Zeitschrift für Assyriologie
ZAW	Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft

Bible Versions

CJB	The Complete Jewish Bible (1998)
JPS	Jewish Publication Society OT (1917)
KJV	King James Version
LXX	Septuagint
MT	Massoretic Text
NAU	New American Standard Bible with Codes (1995)
NEB	New English Bible (1970)
NIV	New International Version (1987)
NJB	The New Jerusalem Bible (1985)
P	Peshitta
RSV	Revised Standard Version (1952)
Targ	Targum (Aramaic OT)
Vg	Vulgate

General Abbreviations

Ber.	Berakot
b. Yoma	Babylonian Talmud
Can.	Canaanite
crit. app.	critical apparatus
def. art.	definite article
edn.	edition
esp.	especially
Eth.	Ethiopic
f.	feminine
HB	Hebrew Bible
Heb.	Hebrew
HT	Hebrew Text
impf.	imperfect
JArm.	Jewish Aramaic
MHeb.	Middle Hebrew
Mnd.	Mandean
ms.	manuscript
m. Yoma	mishnah Yoma
Nab	Nabatean
NT	New Testament
OArm.	Old Aramaic
OT	Old Testament
Pehl.	Pehlevi
pf	perfect
pl.	plural
ptcp.	participle
rev.	revised
Sam.	Samaritan

sg.	singular
Syr.	Syriac
transl.	translated
Ug.	Ugaritic
vb.	verb
Yaud.	Yaudi

CHAPTER 1: INTRODUCTORY REMARKS - PLACE, AIM AND METHOD OF STUDY

1.1 The Place of the present study within existing scholarship

The subject of demons and demonology has fascinated scholars and non-scholars, ancient and modern ones alike; it is not surprising that much work has been done on the topic by biblical scholars too.¹

The early works on ‘OT demonology’ were written at the time when comparative religion was popular and anthropology as well as an interest in Mesopotamian and Canaanite parallels was beginning to rise.² Biblical scholars commonly turned to ancient Near Eastern religions and cultures to explain difficult passages in the Hebrew Bible, to find parallels or the ‘original’ of difficult terms and concepts. The concern with the origins of Israelite religion led scholars to seek and find vestiges of ancient religious beliefs in the Old Testament. Since belief in ‘evil spirits’ was thought to be common in ancient cultures as well as in Jewish tradition, it was argued that such belief must be reflected in the Old Testament as well. Thus terms such as lilith and reshef which are known as demons or gods in Mesopotamian/Canaanite religion, or azazel and qeteb which are known as demons in later Jewish tradition were easily identified as ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible. Others, such as deber, was ‘demonised’ by association with reshef and qeteb, but a Mesopotamian original figure was also sought behind it.³

¹ See Survey of ‘OT Demonology’ in 1.2 below. It is the view of the present study that the use of the term ‘demon’ in relation to the Hebrew Bible is problematic (see below 1.2, esp. pp. 10-13). Therefore it shall be used in inverted commas throughout this study when used in reference to the Old Testament.

² See for example the works of Witton Davies, Oesterley and Robinson, Langton below; also works by F. Lenormant, Chaldean Magic: Its Origin and Development, trans. with considerable additions by the author, by F. Lenormant (London: Samuel Bagster and Sons, 1877); R. Karsten, The Origins of Religion (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1935); W. Schmidt, The Origin and Growth of Religion. Facts and Theories, trans. by H. J. Rose, 2nd edn (London: Methuen, 1935); W. Roberstson Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites. The Fundamental Institutions, 3rd edn (London: Ktav, 1969) to mention just a few.

³ There are many terms that are proposed ‘demons of the Old Testament’, and some of them are considered to be proper names. See for example ‘Proposed demons’ by J. K. Kuemmerlin-McLean, p.139 in ‘Demons: Old Testament’, ABD, vol. 2, pp. 138-140. Five terms, azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef, have been selected in the present study not only because arguably they are the most well-known ‘OT demons’, but also because they occur in a variety of texts, both poetical and prose narrative. The investigation of lilith in chapter 4 includes a detailed discussion of other terms that are held to be ‘demons’ in animal form (תַּנִּינִים, בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה, צִיִּים, אֲיִים and שְׂעִיר) as they are closely

J. Blair 1: Introduction

The survey of literature on ‘OT demonology’ below and the history of research in chapter 2 demonstrate both in general terms and specifically with regard to azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef that the consensus of early 20th century scholars has not been challenged by modern scholarship.

1.2 A Survey of ‘OT Demonology’

One of the earlier works on this topic is Magic, Divination and Demonology Among the Hebrews and their Neighbours, Including an Examination of Biblical References and of the Biblical Terms, by T. Witton Davies,⁴ in which the author treats demonology together with magic, divination and necromancy, as he believes them to be ‘so closely connected in their character and history, that it is impossible to lay down lines between them which are fixed and exclusive’.⁵ Davies recognizes that there are problems with the term ‘demonology’, e.g. the etymology of the word can be misleading, as its original reference was different from its later usage.⁶ However, Davies’ own definition of demonology is itself not without problems. He defines it as ‘the belief which is a part of advanced animism – that there exist evil spirits which are more or less responsible for the misfortunes which assail men’ (p. 7). Thus for Davies ‘demons’ are equal to evil spirits, and a belief in evil spirits is ‘universal’ (p. 95). In tracing the origins of belief in (evil) spirits Davies, as other 19th century scholars in general, follows in the footsteps of E. B. Tylor⁷ and animism, and his definition arises from comparative religion. Demonology in the Old Testament is treated in five pages as the first part of his chapter III, ‘Demonology’, followed by the sections on demonology in the Apocrypha, New Testament, Antichrist, Josephus, related to the analysis of lilith. Satan is not included in this study as since P. Day’s excellent study, An Adversary in Heaven: Satan in the Hebrew Bible, Harvard Semitic Monographs (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988), it is generally accepted that the term is not the name of a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible. Other terms, for example aluqah (Prov 30:15) or robes (Gen 4:7) could form the subject of future studies.

⁴ (London: James Clarke&Co; Leipzig: M. Spigatis, 1898).

⁵ P.1. In a (presumably) later article he seems to have changed his mind at least regarding the connection of magic and demonology, as he states that although there is such a close link between the two that this led many (no reference) to treat them together, ‘yet there is a distinction’. See his article ‘Magic, Divination, and Demonology among the Semites’, The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, 14 no. 4 (1898), 241-251, (p. 244).

⁶ We shall come back to this discussion later. See 1.3, pp. 11-13.

⁷ Primitive Culture: Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Language, Art, and Custom, 4th rev. edn, vols 1 and 2 (London: John Murray, 1903).

J. Blair 1: Introduction

pseudepigraphical writings, etc. The title indicates a rather ambitious task yet what follows is little more than a listing of terms which, in the context of the Old Testament, are the ‘many indications and survivals’ of the ‘superstition’ of a belief in evil spirits.⁸

Chapter 10 of W.O. E. Oesterley and T. H. Robinson’s *Hebrew Religion: Its Origin and Development*⁹ deals with demonology as ‘further elements in the religious background’ of the Hebrews. The authors presume that ‘the Hebrews, being Semites, shared with the rest of the race all the beliefs’ regarding ‘demons’. Although they believe that ‘most of the passages in the Old Testament in which demons are referred to belong to comparatively late times’, there is a lot of early material preserved in the Hebrew Bible, thus presumably the ‘demons’ are vestiges of an early belief system. Similarly to Witton Davies, Oesterley and Robinson also trace the belief in ‘demons’ to animism, ‘belief in demons is a development of animistic conceptions.’¹⁰

Oesterley and Robinson’s treatment of the subject goes beyond that of Witton Davies; they present a systematic (and longer) discussion. According to them ‘demons’ in the Old Testament appear in two forms (or can be divided into two classes), theriomorphic, ‘demons’ in animal form (תַּנִּיִּם, בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, צַיִּים, אַיִּים and שְׂעִיר, Azazel), and anthropomorphic, ‘demons’ in human form (Lilith, Aluqah, Namtar, and Qeteb). The authors stress that although there are not many references to such ‘demons’ in the Old Testament, ‘when considered in the light of Babylonian parallels, they will be found to be significant.’ (p. 117)

Their main argument for taking these terms as ‘demons’ seems to be the similarities they found with Babylonian demonology and later Jewish interpretation. Beside the Mesopotamian parallels Oesterley and Robinson contend that the fact that the names of these ‘demons’ are mentioned without further explanation ‘shows that the name was familiar, therefore traditional’ (p.118).

An important work in the treatment of demonology is E. Langton’s Essentials of Demonology, A Study of Jewish and Christian Doctrine Its Origin and

⁸ Magic, pp. 95-100. The work did not receive a positive review in its time. M. Jastrow called it ‘a crude piece of work, and ‘practically worthless’. See ‘T. Witton Davies on Magic, Divination and Demonology’, The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, 15 no.3 (1899), 172-173.

⁹ 2nd rev. edn (London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1937, repr. 1947). The book was first published in 1930; the 2nd edition was reprinted several times, in 1940, 1944 and 1947.

¹⁰ This view is also shared by Langton, see below, p. 4.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

*Development.*¹¹ The work is part of a series of books by Langton on related subjects.¹² In its time it was considered as the first important treatment of the Biblical beliefs and as a great success. In its Foreword C. Ryder Smith wrote:

It is remarkable that the subject of Biblical beliefs in this realm has had to wait so long for something more than incidental and sporadic treatment. There was need that the material for its adequate study should be collected and arranged. In several books Dr Edward Langton has set himself the formidable task of dealing with the subjects of angelology and demonology in Hebrew and Christian history. In this volume he has undertaken the presentation of the Biblical phenomena, not in artificial isolation, but in their historical context. He seems to me to have succeeded so well that no one else will need for a long time to attempt the same arduous task.

The book is still used as a reference work by modern scholars.¹³

Essentials of Demonology treats a wide range of subjects, from ‘Ancient Semitic Demonology’ (ch.1) through ‘The Demonology of the Old Testament and Its Expansion in Rabbinic literature’ (ch. 2), to the ‘The Teaching of Jewish Apocryphal and Apocalyptic Literature’ (ch. 5) and ‘The Teaching of the New Testament’ (ch. 6). Langton also discusses ‘The Relation of Jewish to Persian Conceptions’ (ch. 3), and ‘The Relation of Jewish to Greek conceptions’ (ch. 4). His aim is to trace the origins of the demonological beliefs as they appear in the apocryphal literature and the New Testament. He admits that these beliefs ‘do not appear in the Old Testament’, but nevertheless he proceeds with an examination of the ‘Old Testament conceptions’ as well as that of Israel’s neighbours.¹⁴ It is evident from Langton’s study that he believes that, since the Israelites were in close contact with the Arabs, Babylonians, and Assyrians at various points during the course of their histories, the beliefs of these people must have influenced Israelite religion, and thus their demonology is also reflected in the Hebrew Scriptures (i.e. the Old Testament). For ¹¹ (London: the Epworth Press, 1949).

¹² For example: The Ministries of the Angelic Powers: According to the Old Testament and later Jewish Literature; Supernatural: The Doctrine of Spirits, Angels, and Demons from the Middle Ages until the Present Time; Good and Evil Spirits: A Study of the Jewish and Christian Doctrine, Its Origin and Development; Satan: A Study of the Character of Satan through all the Ages.

¹³ For example Kuemmerlin-McLean, pp. 138-140; J. B. Long, ‘Demons: An Overview’, *EncRel*¹, IV, p. 287; W. Stephens, ‘Demons: An Overview’, *EncRel*², IV, p. 2281; J. R. Burrelli, ‘A Study of Psalm 91 with Special Reference to the Theory that It Was Intended as a Protection Against Demons and Magic’ (unpublished doctoral thesis, University of Cambridge, 1994), p. 172.

¹⁴ ‘Introductory Note’.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

example, he concludes that the se'irim in Lev 17:7, 2 Kings 23:8, and 2 Chron 11:15, are creatures of 'demonic' character since the Arabs, Babylonians and Assyrians 'frequently conceived of demons as assuming the form of animals which haunted ruins and desolate places' and these were 'portrayed as hairy beings'. The se'irim in Isa 13:21 and 34:14 must be referring to more than 'mere natural animals' since they are mentioned along with Lilith, and 'we have seen that Lilith appears as a notable demon in Babylonian Demonology' (pp. 39-40). Taking this further, from the fact that other animals (אֲחִים, אֵיִם, צִיִּים, בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה, תַּנִּים) occur together with lilith and se'irim in Isa 34, Langton deduces that therefore these also must be 'demons'.

The fact that the animals enumerated above, and which also appear in Isaiah 34:14, include such well-known demonic creatures as the 'Se'irim' and 'Lilith' leads naturally to the conclusion that all the animals mentioned share the same character. They are conceived to be either demons themselves, as in the case of the serpent in Genesis 3, or they are incarnations of demons. This conclusion is supported by all that we know of the association of animals and demons in Egyptian, Arabian, and Babylonian demonology. (p. 43)

Azazel is treated similarly. Langton points out that Lev 16:8 suggests that azazel was conceived of as a personal being, and that his dwelling place was in the wilderness like that of the se'irim. So in view of Arab and Babylonian beliefs it is natural to conclude that the passage contains an ancient Semitic belief in desert demons, and Azazel can be explained as 'a Semitic god of the flocks who was later degraded to the level of a demon under the influence of Yahwism' (pp.43-46).

These earlier works on demonology were written in an era when interest in anthropology was starting to rise, and this can be seen in the various authors' treatment of the definition of 'demon' as well as their use of comparative demonology. In biblical scholarship an interest in Mesopotamian parallels has also left its mark on the work of early 20th century scholars to such an extent that they seem to have been more interested in these parallels than in occurrences in the Old Testament itself. None of the above mentioned authors examined the biblical passages in detail determining how these 'demonic terms' functioned in their contexts, rather they treated the terms on the basis of similarities with Babylonian beliefs. They were concerned with the original author's intent in referring to these 'demons' (e.g. on p. 49 Langton states that the psalmist in Ps 91 must have had Namtar in mind when referring to deber).

Mesopotamian/ Canaanite similarities seem to be the main factor in opting for a ‘demonological’ interpretation of these terms in more modern scholarship too. Thus in chapter 4 of his doctoral thesis, entitled ‘Demonology, Sorcery, and Apotropaic Practices in the Hebrew Bible’, Burrelli¹⁵ argues that in the Old Testament there is evidence of ‘a genuine belief in hostile spiritual beings which are unrelated to Yahweh’s service’ (p. 62). His evidence comes from Gen 4:7 (רִבֵּץ); Lev 16:8, 10, 26 (עֲזָאֵל); Job 18:12-14b (אָנֹכִי, ‘his wickedness’, אִיד, ‘calamity’, בְּרִי, ‘disease’, and בְּכֹר מְנַת, ‘the first born of death’); Isa 34:14 (בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה, תַּנִּים, לִילִית); Isa 13:21-22 (צִיִּים, אֲחִים, יַעֲנָה); Isa 23:13 (צִיִּים); Jer 50:39 (צִיִּים, אֲחִים); Zeph 2:14 (קִפְדָּר and קִאֲת) and Prov 30:15a (עֲלִיָּקָה). Burrelli simply follows the general consensus, which in Gen 4:7 is to take רִבֵּץ to be a ‘demon’ ‘on the basis of its Akkadian cognate rābiṣu’,¹⁶ in Lev 16 עֲזָאֵל to refer to the desert ‘demon’ עֲזָאֵל.¹⁷ Whereas the animals in Isa 34:11 and 15 he takes to be real ones, those in v. 14 he argues are ‘demonic’. His argument is based on general agreement, ‘the majority of scholars believe that Lilith, the female night demon of Mesopotamian mythology, or the like, is in the mind of the author.’ Although he points out that one must examine each term in turn in order to decide whether they have a ‘demonic’ nature or not, his argument becomes a circular one and is based on a presupposition. He takes lilith’s ‘demonic’ nature for granted, the sa’ir is then a ‘demon’ because of its occurrence with lilith, and in a similar train of thought, the other animals are also taken as ‘demonic’ because of their occurrence together with the former two.¹⁸

For Burrelli these passages ‘clearly exhibit the living Yahwistic belief in hostile, spirit beings’, and he links these ‘beings’ either directly or indirectly to sin committed by individuals or on a national level (p. 79). Similarly to the earlier scholars, Burrelli seems to be influenced by Mesopotamian parallels and does not examine the terms in their context. He seeks to find the origins of the terms in ¹⁵ As in n. 13, p. 4.

¹⁶ This was first suggested by F. Lenormant in 1877 but then was taken up by later scholars, e. g. L. Ramarson, ‘A propos de Gn 4,7’, Bib 49 (1968), 233-237 (esp. p. 234 n. 1); G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, WBC 1 (Waco: Word Books, 1987), p. 105; Burrelli, p. 6, etc.

¹⁷ Pp. 64-66. Here he follows the suggestions of N. Wyatt, ‘Atonement Theology in Ugarit and Israel’, UF 8 (1976), 415-430, and H. Tawil, ‘Azazel, the Prince of the Steepe: A Comparative Study’, ZAW 92 (1980), 43-59, in particular. For discussion see ch. 2.2 and 2.2.1.

¹⁸ Isa 13:22, 23:13; Jer 50:39 and Zeph 2:14 are all traced back to Isa 34:14. See pp. 68-78.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

Mesopotamian mythology rather than examine their function in their present context. He accepts the general scholarly view without questioning their validity.

An important reference work in the subject of demonology is Dictionary of Deities and Demons in the Bible.¹⁹ According to reviewers both editions²⁰ of this work have become 'standards in the world of biblical scholarship'.²¹ Indeed, the dictionary is a comprehensive work that includes over 400 entries written by the three editors and leading biblical scholars. However, the editors' claim that the dictionary contains entries on 'all the gods and demons whose names are found in the Bible' (p. xv), as well as the title itself, can be misleading, as it would suggest that all the entries refer to either gods or 'demons' whose names occur in the Bible. It certainly raises the question of the editors'/contributors' definition of 'god' and 'demon'.

The articles follow a common structure; they are generally made up of four sections.²² The first section discusses the name of the deity/demon and its etymology, the second deals with ancient Near Eastern evidence, the third section surveys the biblical and post-biblical material, and section four contains a bibliography. In general the articles follow the common scholarly view according to which the terms in question refer to 'demons'.

The most recent book on the topic of demonology is Die Dämonen/Demons, edited by A. Lange, H. Lichtenberger, and K. F. Diethard Römheld.²³ The volume is the publication of the proceedings of an international symposium organized by the editors on the topic of 'demons' containing thirty-four contributions from scholars in various categories. The articles are grouped into eight sections. The introduction includes general discussion on compositional features of the ancient pantheon and problems with definition (two articles), section two has five articles on demons in Ancient Egypt and the ancient Near East.²⁴ Sections three, four and five contain ¹⁹ Ed. by K van den Toorn, B. Becking and P. W. van der Horst, 2nd rev. edn (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1999).

²⁰ First edition was published also by Brill in 1995.

²¹ See the reviews by J. M. Sasson in JAOS 118 no. 1 (1998), 79-80 and G. A. Rendsburg in BASOR 321 (Feb. 2001), 92-93.

²² The article on Azazel has five. The biblical evidence is dealt with in section III, and the post-biblical material in a separate, IV section. Bibliography comes in as section V.

²³ (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003).

²⁴ See for example H. Niehr, 'Zur Entstehung von Dämonen in der Religionsgeschichte Israels: Überlegungen zum Weg des Rešep durch die nordwestsemitische Religionsgeschichte', pp. 84-107,

J. Blair 1: Introduction

articles relating to ‘demons’ in ancient Israel and Judah in pre-exilic and exilic (five articles), Persian (four articles) and Hellenistic (six articles) times. Section six has two articles on Greek and Roman demonology. Section seven with eight articles is dedicated to demons in the New Testament and Gnosticism. The final, eighth section contains two articles on demons after the destruction of the Second Temple.

This book is a fascinating read but only a few of the articles are relevant to our discussion. We shall refer here to three: the articles by A. K. Petersen, O. Keel and H. J. Fabry.²⁵

Keel argues that there is no dualistic view in the Hebrew Bible; a separate kingdom of good and evil is not yet present. He sees Christian biblical scholars’ reading of the Old Testament as biased by New Testament ideas. What we assume by ‘evil’, he argues, the Old Testament accepts as an integral part of the cosmos. Thus it is Yahweh himself who appears with ‘demonic’ characteristics in some texts (e.g. Gen 32:27; Exod 4:24-26), and in others the ‘evil spirit’ comes from him (1 Sam 16:14, רִיחַ רָעָה מֵאֵת יְהוָה), or the ‘lying spirit’ is part of his court (1 Kgs 22:22-24, רִיחַ שָׁקֶר). Only in early Jewish literature did Satan become the centre of a world separate and independent from Yahweh where everything that contradicted the pure moral character of Yahweh could be deposited. However, Keel argues, foreign cults are ‘demonised’ in the Hebrew Bible (in rare instances great gods such as Reshef and Deber became integrated into Yahweh’s court, as in Hab 3:5).²⁶

It is not clear what Keel’s position on Azazel is, but it seems that he is inclined to see in it a ‘demonic’ figure. He emphasises that Azazel inhabited the desert and as such he was regularly interpreted as a ‘demonic’ being by rabbinic and modern exegetes alike (p. 223). Following Eissfeldt, Keel finds it possible that a representation of dealing with Northwest Semitic Reshef. For a discussion of this article see ch.2, section 2.6.5, pp. 55-56.

²⁵ Thus the articles by A. K. Petersen, ‘The Notion of Demon: Open Questions to a diffuse Concept’, pp. 23-41; O. Keel, ‘Schwache alttestamentliche Ansätze zur Konstruktion einer stark dualistisch getönten Welt’, pp. 211-236, and the first part of H. J. Fabry’s article, ‘“Satan” – Begriff und Wirklichkeit: Untersuchungen zur Dämonologie der alttestamentlichen Weisheitsliteratur’, pp. 269-291 (esp. pp. 269-272).

²⁶ Pp. 228-230. Thus following his line of argument, it would seem that since terms that are related to foreign cults refer to ‘demons’, the other occurrences of reshef and deber would have to be taken as referring to ‘demons’.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

Azazel can be found on an ivory cut from Meggido, though this view has been challenged.²⁷

It is interesting that while Keel takes most of the animals that appear in Isa 34 (and parallel texts) to refer to real animals which were invoked because of the eerie sound and cry they make, he regards the צִיִּים (but not the אֲיִים)²⁸ and the שְׁעִירִים as ‘demons’ probably based on the LXX translation of the terms,²⁹ and Lilith as the night demoness of Mesopotamian origins.

Fabry’s view is similar to that of Keel in that he argues that ‘demons’ in the Old Testament are remnants of an earlier polytheism. He sees various groups (צִיִּים, שְׁעִירִים, שָׂדִים,³⁰ אֱלֹהִים,³¹ אֱלִילִים and אֲטָיִים³²) and individual ‘demons’ (Lilith,³³ Reshef,³⁴ Qeteb,³⁵ and *Deber*³⁶) as well as ‘demonic animals’ (the jackals, ostriches and owls in Isa 13:21-22, 34:13-14; Jer 50:39 and Job 30:29)³⁷ present in the Old Testament. It is not clear where he classes Azazel as he mentions it separately. He writes:

Der Sündenbock-Ritus ist dem Azazel gewidmet (Lev 16). Dahinter steht wohl ein älterer Kult um einen Gewittergötzen, der im AT jahweisiert, später dann dämonisiert worden ist. (p. 270)

Many of these forms, Fabry argues, are known from Mesopotamian and Canaanite mythology, thus clearly, they are remnants of an old polytheism. Israelite ²⁷ See discussion on pp. 224-227.

²⁸ Though this is not clear. See pp. 220-222.

²⁹ LXX translates צִיִּים with δαμνία in Isa 34:14 only; in its other occurrences the word is translated variously (‘wild beast’ in Isa 13:21; ‘idols’ in Jer 50:39; ‘Ethiopians’ in Pss 72:9 and 74:14; and it is missing from Isa 23:13). שְׁעִירִים is translated with δαμνία in Isa 13:21; with ονοκενταυροι in Isa 34:14; with ματαιοις in Lev 17: 7 and 2 Chron 11:15 where ειδωλοις is also added.

³⁰ Deut 32:17.

³¹ 1 Sam 28:13.

³² Isa 19:3.

³³ Isa 34:14 and Job 18:15.

³⁴ Deut 32:24; Hab 3:5 and Ps 78:48.

³⁵ Deut 32:24; Isa 28:2; Hos 13:14; Ps 91:6.

³⁶ Hos 13:14 and Hab 3:5.

³⁷ Besides these he also lists כֶּלֶב, ‘dog’ in Ps 22:21; נָחָשׁ, ‘snake’ in Gen 3:1 and Qoh 10:11.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

monotheism reduced them to intermediate beings of ‘demonic’ status in the Old Testament literature, whose chief later becomes Satan.

Petersen’s article addresses the question of definition of the concept of ‘demon’. He argues that the definition should be extended in terms of function ‘in order to include additional notions which for definitional reasons pertaining to the history of scholarship have been left out of scope’ (p. 31). Thus for him:

Demons may signify both gods and lesser spirits. They may denote mediatory beings either benevolent or malevolent in nature. They may designate deceased souls as well as outburst of irrationality in the human world. The concept may be used in a personified and in a depersonified sense. It may connote freedom as well as unfreedom. (p.39)

Petersen sees ‘inexhaustible’ possibilities of extending the term and claims that if the definition of ‘demon’ is extended this way,

... we may not only be able to include all the different applications of the concepts during the course of its history of interpretation. We may also use it as a general religio-historical category that makes it possible to study notions of demons in contexts in which the concept itself does not occur.... The advantage of the chosen definition, however, is its capability of integrating the entire spectre of different uses witnessed by the concept’s history of reception. (p. 39)

Petersen’s definition reflects the history of reception of the concept of ‘demon’, but his argument that it can be used to ‘study notions of demons in contexts in which the concept itself does not occur’ is questionable. Petersen actually points to the problem though not intentionally. Scholars who speak of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible or of ‘OT demonology’ in general, work with an understanding of the concept of ‘demon’ that on the surface appears as defined by Petersen, but below the surface there is a subconscious understanding. This can be seen especially in the case of scholars who start with a definition of ‘demon’ before turning to discussing individual ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible.³⁸ They usually start with the Greek word, δαίμων from which the English word, through the Latin daemon, derived, pointing to the original notion which from the time of Homer referred to a class of lesser divinities, intermediate beings between the gods and humans (Hesiod included in this class the souls of those who lived in the Golden Age). Then they point out that gradually the term acquired a ³⁸ For example Keel, pp. 211-212; Petersen, pp. 23-41; *EncRel*¹, IV, p. 282; G.J. Riley, ‘Demon’, in DDD, pp. 235-240, esp. pp. 235-236.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

more and more negative connotation and in intertestamental literature, the New Testament and early Christian writings it was applied only to 'evil spirits' that cause harm (physical, mental and moral) to humans.³⁹ Since then the English term 'demon' is used in this entirely negative sense. Today a demon is an evil spirit with the emphasis being on evil.⁴⁰ For the purposes of the present study 'demon' can be defined as a supernatural evil being that exists or operates independent from Yahweh. Demons cause physical, mental and moral harm. They are not worshipped and do not receive sacrifice.

Some scholars define the term this way,⁴¹ others do not give a definition but their understanding of 'demons' as evil is obvious.⁴² The problem therefore is that this word is applied to the Hebrew Bible.⁴³ Such application carries the danger of imposing ideas, reading into the texts ideas that are not present.⁴⁴

³⁹ Petersen has shown how the concept has developed and changed from its original meaning to the usage in Judaism and early Christianity (pp. 23-28; 31-35).

⁴⁰ This is clear from the modern definitions. The Oxford Dictionary of English (2nd rev. edn, ed. by C. Soanes and A. Stevenson, Oxford University Press, 2005, p. 462) defines 'demon' as 'an evil spirit or devil, especially one thought to possess a person or act as a tormentor in hell'. The term is even applied to people in today's usage, thus it can mean 'a cruel, evil, or unmanageable person'. The Chambers Dictionary (Edinburgh: Chambers Harrop Publ., 2003), *EncJud*¹ (p.1522) and online dictionaries give the same definition. (See for example Merriam-Webster's Online dictionary, www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/demon; www.yourdictionary.com/demon [accessed 2008-04-25]). Beside 'devil' other synonyms usually given are 'fiend'; 'imp'; 'vampire'; 'incubus' and 'monster'. It is not the purpose of the present study to give a different definition of 'demon'.

⁴¹ E.g. Fabry, p. 269; D. R. Hillers, *EncJud*¹, V, p. 1521.

⁴² They often use the expression 'evil demon/s'. See for example A. Caquot, 'Sur Quelques Démons de L'Ancien Testament (Reshep, Qeteb, Deber)', Semitica 6 (1956), 53-68; T. Gaster, Myth, Legend, and Custom in the Old Testament (New York: Harper & Row Publishers, 1969) in reference to reshef and qeteb (see also 2.5.1; 2.6.5). For G. del Olmo Lete deber is a 'demon' or 'evil deity' ('Deber', in DDD, pp.231- 232; see also 2.4, p.33) M. Eszenyei Szeles, Wrath and Mercy: A Commentary on the Books of Habakkuk and Zephaniah, International Theological Commentary (Edinburgh: Handsel, 1987), refers to deber and reshef as oppressive 'horrible demons' in Hab 3:5 (see also 5.2.3, n.62 p 113).

⁴³ Kuemmerlin-McLean (p. 139) writes that 'The most generally accepted understanding is of demons as "evil spirits" who live in ruins and the desert and are responsible for illness and natural disasters.'

⁴⁴ Keel has pointed it out that Christian biblical scholars read the Old Testament biased by New Testament ideas (p. 230), and Petersen admits that 'It is by means of the modern, universal religio-historical category that we may identify ideas of demons in the Hebrew Bible or in the Qumran texts, for instance. The texts themselves do not provide us with the notion.' (p. 29)

1.3 Summary observations and implications

Scholars usually fall into one or both of two categories (though the issue is more complex) regarding what or who constitutes a ‘demon’ in the Old Testament.

1) On the basis of ancient Near Eastern belief in ‘demons’ inhabiting desert and desolate places, and the fact that particular animals (e.g. snakes, scorpions, goats, jackals, hyenas, owls, etc.) were associated with ‘demons’, some Hebrew terms such as azazel (goat), lilith (owl), תַּנִּיִּים (dragon), בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה (ostrich), אַיִים, צִיִּים (howling creatures), and שְׂעִיר (goat), etc. are considered as ‘demons’. This view can be traced mainly to earlier scholars (Witton Davies, Oesterley, Langton) but some modern ones (Keel, Fabry) also follow this line.⁴⁵ In particular, early 20th century scholars (mostly Christian) believed that Hebrew religion would have been similar to other Semitic peoples’ religions; therefore Semitic demonology would have been reflected in the Old Testament. However, this understanding is based on Mesopotamian concepts and applied to the Old Testament rather than arising from it.

2) Another general view is that ‘demons’ are foreign deities that occur in the Hebrew Bible. Thus deber, qeteb and reshef are regarded as ancient Near Eastern gods, vestiges of an ancient polytheism, who out of necessity were turned into ‘demons’ by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. Azazel is also classed in this category by some.⁴⁶ This view is based on the LXX translating the Hebrew term shedim, which is used in reference to foreign deities, as well as some other problematic terms (e.g. siyyim in Isa 13:21; 34:12; Jer 50:39, etc., se’irim in Lev 17:7; Isa 34:14, etc.) with δαίμων or δαιμόνιον. Since this term from Christian times has acquired the meaning of ‘evil spirit’, our terms in question are deemed ‘demons’ in the modern sense of the word.

As mentioned above, the issue of categorising is complex. Later Jewish belief is also an influencing factor as in the case of azazel, qeteb and lilith. However, the use of comparative material, while useful in some aspects, complicates the issue because it raises other questions.⁴⁷

⁴⁵ See above 1.2 and ch.2 History of Research.

⁴⁶ E.g. by Langdon, Wyatt, Tawil (see 2.2.1, pp. 19-22). Lilith can also be classed here as it is regarded as a ‘demon’ in the HB because a demon of similar name was known in Mesopotamia. See above 1.2 and also 2.3.

⁴⁷ The use of comparative material raises ‘the issue of the degree of legitimate comparison possible between cultures separated by language, time, geography, and theology’ (Kuemmerlin-McLean, p. 139). The question of the nature of the material being compared also should not be ignored. On

J. Blair 1: Introduction

To conclude: the survey of the literature on ‘OT demonology’ above shows that earlier scholars’ concern with the subject was based on Mesopotamian or Canaanite similarities, and it was concerned with tracing the development of Jewish demonology from its origins through the Old Testament to later times. Terms that have been identified by early scholars such as Witton Davies, Oesterley or Langton as ‘demons’ are still regarded as such by modern scholarship (Burrelli, Keel, Fabry, and others). Mesopotamian, Canaanite or other ancient Near Eastern similarities still play a major role in the identification of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible.

Previous works on the subject used various methodologies with an emphasis on comparison with ancient Near Eastern and post-biblical Jewish material. Some modern critics also show interest in the formation of the texts with the goal to reconstruct the history of ‘demons’ in Israelite religion.⁴⁸

The major works proceed from the assumption that the terms referred to were ‘demons’ in the ancient Near East and /or later, or that they were deities who became ‘demonised’ by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. However, the use of the term ‘demon’ in reference to the Hebrew Bible is problematic.⁴⁹ Thus the question arises: Can we talk of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible? Are the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef names of ‘demons’?

1.4 Aim of present study

As we have learnt from the Survey of ‘OT demonology’ (1.2) above that it is generally accepted without challenge that the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and problems with comparative studies of biblical texts see for example H. M. Barstad, ‘Comparare necesse est? Ancient Israelite and Ancient Near Eastern Prophecy in a Comparative Perspective’ in Prophecy in Its Ancient Near Eastern Context: Mesopotamian, Biblical, and Arabian Perspectives, ed. by M. Nissinen, SBL Symposium no 13 (Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2000), pp. 1-11. The importance of knowing the genre of the texts one is studying has been emphasised by J. Barton, Reading the OT: Method in Biblical Study, 2nd edn (London: Darton, Longman and Todd, 2006), pp. 5-6; H. M. Barstad, ‘Jeremiah as Text. Some Reflections on Genre and Reality in Old Testament prophetic Research’, in Historie og konstruktion: Festschrift til Niels Peter Lemche i anledning af 60 års fødselsdagen den 6. September 2005, ed. by M. Müller and T. L. Thompson (København: Museum Tusulanums Forlag, 2005), pp. 11-18.

⁴⁸ Traditional exegetical methods (e.g. Source Analysis, Form Criticism, Redaction Criticism or Tradition History) have their limits as they aim to reconstruct historical circumstances (e.g. in which the text was produced, the identity or intention of the authors, original audiences, etc.). See for example R. N. Soulen and R. K. Soulen, ‘Narrative Criticism’ in Handbook of Biblical Criticism (Cambridge: James Clarke, 2001) p. 119.

⁴⁹ See 1.2 above esp. pp. 10-11.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

reshef are the personal names of ‘demons’ appearing in the Hebrew Bible, the necessity arises to return to the texts in order to examine each term in its context. Other questions such as: ‘Are these terms proper names?’, ‘Are there mythological figures behind them?’, ‘What is their meaning?’, will also be asked.

This study does not question the validity of traditional methods in exegesis, but it argues that since there are so many difficulties attached to the various scholarly approaches to the treatment of ‘OT demons’, another approach could bring in diverse perspectives. Thus the present study aims to supplement the existing works by taking a different approach. Instead of aiming to reconstruct the history of ‘demons’ in Israelite religion, its purpose is to allow the Hebrew texts to provide the primary source for understanding how the terms in question function in their contexts.⁵⁰

1.5 Methodological and procedural remarks

To accomplish its goal the present study will provide an exegesis based on Close Reading of all the relevant Hebrew Bible passages in which the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb, and reshef appear. This means that attention is paid to the linguistic, semantic, and structural levels of the texts.⁵¹ In the case of terms that occur many times (deber, qeteb and reshef) the aim is to determine their meaning and function from their semantic field⁵² and their contexts. When examined closely the texts themselves will present the interpretation of each word. The examination of the semantic field is not possible in the case of azazel and lilith which only occur once.

⁵⁰ As J. Barton writes: ‘Biblical interpreters today tend to agree with structuralist critics that the job of the exegete is to explicate “the text itself”, not the reality to which the text is supposed to refer, nor the ideas in the mind of its author.’ See Reading the OT, pp. 220-222.

⁵¹ Close Reading is the ‘distinctive procedure’ of New Criticism. New Critics work with the text itself without concerning themselves with external (historical) circumstances. They emphasise the relationship between the ideas expressed in the text and the form of the text, i.e the way the text relates those ideas. New Criticism’s concern is not with the author or the author’s intent but with the properties of the text. On New Criticism see for example M. H. Abrams, ‘New Criticism’ in A Glossary of Literary Terms, 7th edn (Fort Worth: Harcourt Brace College Publ., 1999), pp. 180-182; T. K. Beal, K. A. Keefer and T. Linafelt, ‘Literary and Structuralist/Postmodernist Approaches Methods’ in Methods of Biblical Interpretation: Excerpted from the Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation ed. by J. H. Hayes (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 2004), pp. 159-167; Barton, Reading the OT, pp. 140-197; A. W. Biddle and T. Fulwiler, Reading, Writing, and the Study of Literature (New York: Random House, 1989); L. Steven, Texts and Contexts: Writing About Literature with Critical Theory (New York: Harper Collins, 1994).

⁵² See S. E. Porter, ‘Linguistics and Biblical Interpretation’ in Methods of Biblical Interpretation, ed. by Hayes, pp. 35-40; ‘Semantics’ and ‘Semasiology’, in Handbook of Biblical Criticism, ed. by Soulen, pp. 169-170.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

In these cases the emphasis is on a close examination of the immediate context in order to determine the function (and if possible the meaning) of the term. The reading focuses on determining how the various signals within the text can guide towards meaning, focusing on an ‘implied’ author or poet rather than on an actual/historical one as in the historical methods (also an ‘implied reader’ is kept in mind).⁵³ Each text analysis begins by giving a structure.⁵⁴ This is followed by a step-by-step analysis of the text noting how the (implied) poet/author uses the various poetical/rhetorical devices, especially personification, but also parallelism, similes, irony, mythological elements, etc.,⁵⁵ in order to convey the meaning of the text and ultimately to determine the expected effects of the poems/stories on their audiences (implied readers).⁵⁶ The approach is aimed to be inductive, reading the texts without any presuppositions at the outset.⁵⁷ The available evidence will first be examined before a conclusion is allowed to emerge from that evidence. It is noted that personification plays an especially important role not only in poetic (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel) but also in prose (Leviticus, some of Jeremiah, Exodus, Numbers, etc.) passages. Recognising it aids the understanding of the texts (it has been ignored in most of the Jeremiah and Ezekiel passages), but one has to be careful not to read too much into these personifications (as is usually done in Hosea 13 or Habakkuk 3).

⁵³ Narrative criticism is a method which presents itself as an eclectic approach (according to R. N. Soulen and R. K. Soulen it is more a ‘focus of enquiry’ than a methodology); it makes use of and contributes to Structuralism, Rhetorical and Reader-response criticisms. See ‘Narrative Criticism’, in Handbook of Biblical Criticism, pp. 120-121; M. A. Powell, ‘Narrative Criticism’ in Methods of Biblical Interpretation, ed. by Hayes, pp. 169-172; M. A. Powell, What is Narrative Criticism?, Guides to Biblical Scholarship, NT Series (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1990); S. Chatman, Story and Discourse: Narrative Structure in Fiction and Film (Ithaca and London: Cornell University Press, 1978).

⁵⁴ Barton writes: ‘Investigating the possibility that there are rhetorical structures in a text raises fresh possibilities of interpretation, and can increase our respect for the biblical writers, who knew much more about how to present a cogent argument than modern critics sometimes credit them with.’ See Reading the OT, p. 204.

⁵⁵ See for ex. J. P. Fokkelman, Reading Biblical Poetry: An Introductory Guide, trans. by I. Smit, (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2001); W. G. E. Watson, Classical Hebrew Poetry: A Guide to its Techniques, JSOTSup 26 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995, rev. edn); L. Alonso Schökel, A Manual of Hebrew Poetics, Subsidia Biblica 11 (Roma: Editrice Pontificio Istituto Biblico, 2000); J. P. Fokkelman, Reading Biblical Narrative: An Introductory Guide, trans. by I. Smit, (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1999); R. Alter, The Art of Biblical Narrative (New York: Basic Books, 1981); A. Berlin, Poetics and Interpretation of Biblical Narrative, Bible and Literature series 9 (Sheffield: Almond Press, 1983).

⁵⁶ Powell, ‘Narrative Criticism’, p. 169.

⁵⁷ This would be the ideal approach; however, it cannot be done.

J. Blair 1: Introduction

The presence of mythological elements is underlined but it is argued that they are used as a poetical device and cannot be cited as proof for a living belief in demons or other mythical creatures.

1.6 Results of investigation

The present study shows that contrary to former and current scholarship there is nothing in the texts to support the view that azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef are the names of 'demons'. There is no evidence to suggest that there are mythological figures behind azazel, lilith or the personifications of deber and qeteb. In the case of reshef there is a possible connection to the Semitic deity Reshef. However, the mythological motifs are used merely as a poetic device.⁵⁸

⁵⁸ For a more detailed version of the results see Main Conclusion.

CHAPTER 2: HISTORY OF RESEARCH OF AZAZEL, LILITH, DEBER, QETEB AND RESHEF

2.1 Introduction

The Survey of ‘OT Demonology’ in the previous chapter showed in general that both early 20th century and modern scholars place a great emphasis on Mesopotamian, Canaanite or other ancient Near Eastern similarities in the identification of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible.¹ They assume that ‘OT demons’ were ‘demons’ in the ancient Near East and / or later or that they were deities who became ‘demonised’ by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. The present chapter takes a closer look at the interpretation of azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef to see if the general observations are valid in these specific cases.

2.2 The Interpretation of azazel

Interpretations usually follow one of four main lines.

According to the first one עֲזַזְאֵל is an abstract noun meaning ‘destruction’ or ‘entire removal’.² Hoffman and Hertz³ also prefer to take it as a Hebrew noun meaning ‘complete destruction’. It seems this view may be shared by Wenham too, although it is not entirely clear whether he favours this or the following interpretation.⁴ He simply translates לְעֲזַזְאֵל as ‘for Azazel’; ‘Azazel’s lot’; ‘to Azazel’.

The second interpretation is that azazel is the place where the goat was sent. This is based on the midrashic interpretation of אֶרֶץ גְּזֵרָה (inaccessible region) in v. 22 as

¹ See summary observations in 1.3.

² Cf. BDB deriving it from Arabic ‘zl, ‘remove’ (p. 736: 5799). BDB also gives the possibility of it being the proper name of a spirit haunting the desert or a fallen angel, though indicates that the previous interpretation is preferred. HALOT on the other hand is inclined towards the ‘demonological’ interpretation; see p. 806.

³ Quoted in G. J. Wenham, The Book of Leviticus (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1979), p. 234; and in J. E. Hartley, Leviticus, WBC 4 (Dallas: Word Books, 1992), p. 222.

⁴ Wenham, Leviticus, argues that v. 22 is an expansion of what is said in v.10, a region that is cut off, lit. ‘a land of cutting off’. If this is so, he argues, Rashi would be justified in taking ‘land of cutting off’ as interpretative of azazel. Depending on how one understands the phrase, a land that is cut off, or a place that cuts off, azazel may be taken as either meaning ‘rocky’ or ‘craggy’, or alternatively, ‘total destruction’. Whichever the choice, for Wenham the main point is the meaning of the ceremony: ‘Whether Azazel means the mountain where the goat is destroyed, the sin which is given to destruction, or the evil angel who is given a bribe so that he does not become an accuser, it all comes back to the same basic idea: that sin is exterminated from Israel.’ (pp.233- 235)

J. Blair 2. History of research synonymous with עֲזָזָל. Yoma 67b thus understands עֲזָזָל as ‘a fierce and difficult land’, taking the first part of the word as עֲזָז, ‘strong, fierce’.⁵ G. R. Driver’s understanding is similar, also going back to the root עֲזָז but he derives his translation of עֲזָזָל as ‘jagged rocks, precipice’ from the Arabic ‘azâzu(n), ‘rough ground’.⁶

Some scholars, e.g. Snaith and Porter, follow this explanation.⁷ However, other scholars find it unacceptable and forced, and even ‘laboured’.⁸

The third line of interpretation regards azazel as the goat that is sent off, the ‘go-away goat’. LXX and Vg took this view, and it was advocated more recently by the anthropologist M. Douglas.⁹ Bellinger also renders azazel as ‘the scapegoat’.¹⁰ This interpretation is based on an understanding of עֲזָזָל as a compound of עֵז, ‘goat’ + אָזַל, ‘go, go off’, hence ‘the go-away goat’.¹¹

The fourth view, with a little variation, seems to be the most popular amongst scholars.¹² According to this, Azazel is the name of a supernatural being. Most

⁵ BDB 738: 5810; HALOT, p. 808. B. A. Levine, Leviticus, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1989) p. 102; J. Neusner, The Talmud of Babylonia: An American Translation, V.C, Yoma chapters 6-8 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1994), pp. 28-29.

⁶ ‘Three Technical Terms in the Pentateuch’, JSS 1 (1956), 97-105.

⁷ N. H. Snaith (ed.), Leviticus and Numbers (London: Thomas Nelson and Sons, 1967), pp. 112-113; J. R. Porter, Leviticus: A Commentary (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1976), p. 127.

⁸ See for example Wyatt, ‘Atonement’, p. 428; D. P. Wright, The Disposal of Impurity. Elimination Rites in the Bible and in Hittite and Mesopotamian Literature (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987), pp. 21-22 (p. 21) and ‘Azazel’ in ABD 1, pp. 536-537 (p. 536); Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 237-238; Levine, Leviticus, p. 102.

⁹ M. Douglas, Leviticus as Literature (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999); ‘The Go-Away Goat’, in The Book of Leviticus: Composition and Reception, ed. by R. Rendtorff and R. A. Kugler, VT Suppl. (Leiden: Brill, 2003), pp. 121-141.

¹⁰ W. H. Bellinger Jr., Leviticus and Numbers, New International Biblical Commentary (USA: Hendrickson Publishers; Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 2001), p. 99. In a short discussion he notes the other possibilities (deity/spirit, the goat of removal/the goat that departs or a place name) and seems to follow the NIV rendering (‘He is to cast lots for the two goats – one lot for the Lord and the other for the scapegoat.’). According to Bellinger, the important thing in the ritual is not the identity of Azazel but the function of the scapegoat, which is ‘to carry away the sins of the people, a striking and powerful symbol’ (p. 103).

¹¹ J. Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1991), points out that אָזַל is Aramaic; it does occur but rarely in Biblical Hebrew, e.g. in Prov 20:14; Job 14:11; see also BDB, p. 1079, 235-236; HALOT, p. 1808. This translation later became the ‘scapegoat’. The term apparently was first used in Tyndale’s English translation of the Bible in 1530. See B. McLean, ‘On the revision of scapegoat terminology’, Numen 37 no. 2 (1990), 168-173(6), p. 168.

¹² HALOT lists ‘a demon of the wilderness’ as the first possible meaning, followed by ‘God’s opponent’; ‘an impotent deity’ and ‘Mot’ (p. 806).

J. Blair 2. History of research commonly, scholars argue that the term is the name of a ‘demon’. Scholars usually cite one or more of the following four points in support.¹³

1. The expression לְעִזְאֵזֶל is parallel to לַיהוָה, Yahweh being God’s personal name, thus requiring that Azazel is also the name of a supernatural being;¹⁴
2. The Hebrew Bible acknowledges that the wilderness is the habitat of ‘demons’ and ‘demonic’ creatures (Lev. 17:7; Isa 13:21; 34:14; cf. Matt.12:43; etc.);¹⁵
3. In intertestamental literature (Book of Enoch) Azazel is a fully developed demon;¹⁶
4. The best explanation for the etymology of the name Azazel is that it is a metathesized form of ‘zz ’l meaning ‘fierce god’ or ‘angry god’. This relies on ancient Near Eastern parallels.¹⁷

We shall consider these points in reverse order.

2.2.1 Etymology and the ancient Near East

This interpretation (4 above) is based on the supposition that עִזְאֵזֶל was originally עִזְזֵאל which has been deliberately altered. This view is held by Cheyne, Wyatt, Delcor, Tawil, D. Wright, and Levine.

¹³ Wenham, Leviticus, p. 234; Wright, Disposal, pp. 21-22 and ‘Azazel’, pp. 536-537, list all four.

¹⁴ M. Delcor, ‘Le mythe de la chute des anges et de l’origine des géants comme explication du mal dans le monde dans l’apocalyptique juive Histoire des traditions, RHR 190 (1976), 3-53, (p. 35); Hartley, Leviticus, p. 238.

¹⁵ Oesterley and Robinson, p. 47; Langton, pp. 45-46; Tawil, pp. 43-45.

¹⁶ Oesterley and Robinson, p. 114; S. H. Langdon, The Mythology of all Races: Semitic (Boston: Marshall Jones Company, 1931), V, p. 357; Delcor., pp. 35-37; L. Grabbe, ‘The Scapegoat Tradition: A Study in Early Jewish Interpretation’, JSJ 18/2 (1987), 152-167, (p. 166); Tawil, pp. 43-45.

¹⁷ Wyatt, ‘Atonement’, p. 429; Wright, Disposal, p. 22; ‘Azazel’, p. 537.

J. Blair 2. History of research

While Cheyne holds that he was a fallen angel but not a ‘demon’,¹⁸ others regard him as originally a deity (a god of the flocks) who later became a ‘demon’.¹⁹

Scholars identify him variously. For Noth the name ‘could hardly be a general description for any “desert demon”, but rather that of a ‘demonic’ being thought of as inhabiting and casting his spell upon a particular wilderness’.²⁰ Other scholars identify Azazel with specific figures. Thus according to Langdon²¹ he is the same as Sumerian Ninamaskug; Wyatt²² identifies him with ‘Attar, and Tawil²³ with Mot. Thus according to these scholars the term עֲזַזְאֵל, best taken as the epithet of a ‘demonic’ being, could mean ‘El is strong’;²⁴ ‘angry god’ or ‘fierce god’;²⁵ ‘the mighty one of El’;²⁶ or ‘mighty goat’.²⁷

¹⁸ On the one hand T. K. Cheyne, ‘Date and Origin of the Ritual of the “Scapegoat”’, ZAW 15 (1895), 153-156, argues that Azazel was a fallen angel to the Jewish theologians, evil by nature but really ‘harmless’. One of the objects of the ritual of the Day of Atonement was to do away with the cult of the se’irim by substituting a personal angel, Azazel, for the crowd of impersonal and dangerous se’irim. Furthermore this view is supported by the form of the name, which in his view was deliberately altered from עֲזַזְאֵל to its present form עֲזַזְאֵל out of reverence, to conceal the true derivation of the fallen angel’s name. Azazel is ‘of literary not of popular origin’, coming from the same school of speculative students of Scripture where the other names of angels in the later literature come from (pp.154-155). On the other hand Delcor argues that in its present form עֲזַזְאֵל is an intentional deformation of עֲזַזְאֵל ‘El is strong’, which originally would have been a real theophoric name like the names of the other angels of the Book of Enoch and Daniel, such as Raphael, Gabriel, Michael. By this act the Massorettes wanted to ridicule this fallen angel. The LXX eliminated the proper name by rendering the Hebrew word liberally: εἰς τὴν ἀποπομπήν (v.10), εἰς ἄφεσιν (v. 26). However, the context requires a proper name, thus, Delcor argues, the versions cannot be sustained (pp. 35-37). Dr P. Hayman drew my attention to the Peshitta’s different spelling (עֲזַזְאֵל) which might presuppose a Hebrew עֲזַזְאֵל.

¹⁹ Osterley and Robinson, p. 114; Langdon, pp. 9-13; Langton, p. 46; Delcor, pp. 35-37.

²⁰ M. Noth, Leviticus: A Commentary (London: SCM Press, 1965), p. 125. Noth only discusses the ‘demon’ interpretation, suggesting that sending a gift to Azazel would have had to have an apotropaic purpose of warding off the demon, and that this rite was probably earlier than the cleansing and atoning for sins. ‘Then the handing over of the goat “to Azazel” would be the primary feature, and the burdening of the goat with Israel’s sins a later, although still a very primitive, feature.’ (p. 125)

²¹ Pp. 9-13.

²² ‘Atonement’, p. 429.

²³ P. 59. In Wyatt’s opinion these are in fact one and the same. See his article ‘Attar and the devil’, TGUOS 25 (1973), 85- 97.

²⁴ Delcor, p. 35.

²⁵ Tawil, pp. 57-59; Wright, Disposal, p. 22.

²⁶ Wyatt, ‘Atonement’, p. 429.

²⁷ Levine, Leviticus, p. 102. He suggests that the word ‘ez, ‘goat’ is represented in ‘aza’zel, and that this form could have developed through reduplication of the letter zayin: ‘ez-’el, was pronounced ‘ezez’el and, finally ‘aza’zel.

J. Blair 2. History of research

D. Wright and Milgrom both argue that although Azazel is the name of a ‘demon’, he does not function as one; the priestly writers stripped him of his personality and powers. In Lev 16 he merely designates a place where the impurities and sins of the Israelites were banished to. The survival of the name does not imply an existing belief in such a ‘demon’.²⁸

These various interpretations are primarily based on scholars’ understanding of what the term אַזָּזֵל means. However, attempts to explain the term’s etymology are difficult to accept as they are based on too many uncertainties such as supposed deliberate changing of the form or connection to ancient Near Eastern divine/demonic figures, which often seems artificial. Etymological explanations do not tell us anything about the function of the term in the Hebrew Bible.²⁹

There is no ancient Near Eastern evidence for the occurrence of the term azazel; yet scholars frequently turn to Ugaritic, Hittite, Mesopotamian and Eblaite texts and rituals to explain the origin of the rite in Lev 16 and thus the figure of Azazel.³⁰ Detailed discussions of these rites can be found in the scholarly works quoted in the note above. These shall not be repeated here; rather we shall reflect on them.

Wyatt uses the Ugaritic text KTU 1.12 i which describes the birth of šhr and qdm, the so-called two Devourers (‘qqm).³¹ His identification of Azazel with ‘Attar is based on his hypothesis that the two Devourers are in fact two goats, the twin hypostases of ‘Attar or ‘Attar-Mot.³² This presents the difficulty that whereas in the Ugaritic text there are two ‘goats’, the rite in Lev 16 involves only one. Wyatt does not see this as a problem and offers an interesting explanation that is however hard to accept. He explains that of the two goats sacrificed the first could easily be assimilated into Israel’s Yahwistic cult, because it duplicated the offering of the bull.

²⁸ Wright, Disposal, p. 23; ‘Azazel’, p. 537; Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1020-1021.

²⁹ The reliability of etymological evidence has been questioned by J. Barr, The Semantics of Biblical Language (London: Oxford University Press, 1961), p. 109.

³⁰ For example Wyatt, ‘Atonement’, uses Ugaritic material (pp. 415-30); Tawil, Mesopotamian and Ugaritic texts and the Enoch material (pp.43- 59); Wright, Disposal, Hittite and Mesopotamian (even some Indian) parallels; Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, follows Wright but also uses Rabbinic sources (pp. 44, 1021, 1071-79); I. Zatelli, ‘The Origin of the Biblical Scapegoat Ritual: The Evidence of Two Eblaite Texts’, VT 48 no. 2 (1998), 254-263, uses two Eblaite texts to explain the origins of the scapegoat rituals.

³¹ ‘Atonement’, pp. 415-430.

³² ‘Atonement’, pp. 418, 428.

J. Blair 2. History of research

To the second type of sacrifice, however, there was no strict parallel in classical Yahwism. Yet the term לְעִזָּאֵל, even if it became meaningless, could in fact have been preserved because of its ancient reputation. Wyatt sees this interpretation supported by the parallel account in Num 29:7-11, where only one goat is mentioned, ‘and this is the one that is sacrificed: that is, it is the one which could easily be assimilated to classical Yahwistic practice, while of the other there is no longer any hint’. The difficulty for Wyatt lies in the interpretation of the phrase l’zz’l, more precisely in the exact significance of the preposition l. In his opinion the victim in the scapegoat traditions was the substitute for the god who was killed, i.e. ‘Attar. ‘So the expelled goat may be not “to Azazel” (or “for Azazel” in the same sense), but rather “on behalf of” or “in lieu of Azazel”, that is, as a substitute for him.’³³

Tawil’s approach raises even more difficulties as he combines Mesopotamian incantations with Enochic material in order to understand azazel in Leviticus 16. We shall consider his arguments in the next section.³⁴

D. Wright’s work, in which he evaluated the ritual of Lev 16 in light of Hittite and Akkadian sources, comes closest in recognising the significance of azazel in the biblical text. He agrees with Tawil’s analysis of the Mesopotamian data but does not accept his conclusion about the ‘ideas infusing’ the scapegoat rite. Although he rightly points out that demonic figures in corresponding rites in the ancient Near East (e.g. Mesopotamia and Anatolia) were treated differently, usually as angry deities or demons who have to be propitiated and appeased by offerings and sacrifices in order to avoid some kind of evil that threatens individuals or humankind, and acknowledges that ‘Lev 16 does not speak of Azazel in any of these terms: he causes no harm, he receives no offerings (the scapegoat is not a sacrifice), prayers are not made to him. Such a laconic treatment of Azazel in view of these other rituals suggests that Azazel is not an active being that is due any sort of veneration or attention’; yet he still takes azazel to be a ‘demon’, even if a non-functional one.³⁵

³³ ‘Atonement’, p. 429.

³⁴ See 2.2.2 below.

³⁵ Wright, ‘Azazel’, p. 537. Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, agrees with Wright in his analysis of the Hittite and Mesopotamian sources (pp. 1071-1079).

J. Blair 2. History of research

Zatelli's article draws attention to a purgation rite from Ebla in which a goat is sent towards the steppe of Alini. However, as with the other ancient Near Eastern texts, the differences are more significant than the similarities.³⁶

C. Carmichael has criticised scholars (in particular Noth, Zatelli and Wright) who look to the ancient Near East for the origin of the scapegoat ritual.³⁷ According to him the problem with their approach is the major assumption that 'the biblical ritual has a long and complicated history' but none of them present any detail as to 'how the supposed precedents led to the biblical rite', though Wright 'attempts to find some pointer in the biblical account that might suggest a pre-history' (pp. 167-168). However, Carmichael's approach is also difficult to accept. He claims that it was the 'Levitical lawgiver' who was responsible for the construction of the scapegoat ritual, attributing the 'institution of the Day of Atonement to the legendary Moses' (p. 168). This is only to 'mask the real lawgiver's inventiveness' (p. 169). Like the author of the Book of Jubilees (34: 18) and Maimonides, who linked the Day of Atonement ritual with the story of Joseph (Gen 37), Carmichael argues that the 'Levitical lawgiver' had the story of Joseph in mind (p. 170). What follows is an interesting but rather unconvincing attempt to show that the scapegoat ritual is in fact based on the occasion when Joseph's brothers sought forgiveness for what they had done against Joseph.

2.2.2 Intertestamental Literature: The Book of Enoch

That azazel is clearly a demon, the source of all evil in the Book of Enoch, is one of the arguments of scholars in favour of a 'demonological' interpretation.¹ Enoch 6-11 seems to contain two separate narratives, one has Shemihazah as the chief of the fallen angels, and the other has Asael.³⁸ There are a number of parallels between the Asael narrative and Lev 16: 1) the similarity of the name; 2) punishment in the desert; 3) placing of sin on Asael/Azazel; 4) healing of the land.

³⁶ Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, emphasises the differences between the Mesopotamian and biblical rites (p. 1079).

³⁷ 'The Origin of the Scapegoat Ritual', VT 50/2 (2000), 167-182.

³⁸ G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 'Apocalyptic and Myth in 1 Enoch 6-11', JBL 96/3 (1979), 383-405; Grabbe, 'Scapegoat', pp.152-167; P. D. Hanson, 'Rebellion in Heaven, Azazel, and Euhemeristic heroes in 1 Enoch 6-11', JBL 96/2 (1977), 195-233.

J. Blair 2. History of research

The punishment in the desert can be best understood in light of the Mesopotamian incantation series of utukku lemutti (Evil Spirits) according to Tawil (p. 43). Further, these texts serve as the basis of understanding the ritual of the Day of Atonement, and enable one to ‘better conceive the true demonic nature of Azazel’ as he is portrayed in the Book of Enoch (pp. 43-59). Tawil finds parallels between the way in which the fallen angel Azazel and the demons of the Akkadian magical texts are disposed of.³⁹

In light of the Akkadian/Mesopotamian texts Tawil argues that the story in the Book of Enoch must go back to an ancient source. While Tawil’s study is valuable in highlighting the parallels between the Enoch material and ancient Mesopotamian magical texts, it does not illuminate the passage in Lev 16.

Despite the parallels and similar expressions between the Enoch narrative and Lev 16, it is debated whether there was any initial connection between them.⁴⁰ Grabbe correctly points out that in the Book of Enoch the evil angel is עסאל or עשאל, with a samek or a sin, and this is not the same as עזאזל with a zayin.⁴¹ In some versions of Enoch there seems to be confusion between עסאל and עזאזל.⁴² This is due perhaps to the fact that ‘by the end of the first century BCE at the latest, the similarity of the name Asael with Azazel caused it to be linked up with the extensive fall-angels tradition which itself had undergone a lengthy development’.⁴³ However, that to the Jews of the Second Temple Azazel was a demon,⁴⁴ does not mean that this must be the case in Leviticus 16.

³⁹ He finds the following literal/mythological correspondences (pp. 52-53):

- darkness as a description of the netherworld
- to bind/tie the demon (evil gods)
- to cast/drive the demon to the netherworld (lit. darkness)
- to imprison/shut up the demon in the netherworld (lit. grave)
- to dispatch the demon/substitutionary elements to the steepeland – to dig /open a hole therein

⁴⁰ Grabbe, ‘Scapegoat’, p. 154.

⁴¹ ‘Scapegoat’, p.153.

⁴² See M. A. Knibb, The Ethiopic Book of Enoch: Introduction, Translation and Commentary (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1978), n. 10 p. 73.

⁴³ Grabbe, ‘Scapegoat’, p. 165.

⁴⁴ Grabbe, ‘Scapegoat’, p. 166.

2.2.3 Evidence in the Hebrew Bible (?)

The first two points cited in support of azazel as ‘demon’ use ‘evidence’ from within the Hebrew Bible.

The argument that the expression לְעִזָּאֵל is parallel to לַיהוָה, and Yahweh being God’s personal name requires that Azazel is also the name of a supernatural being, can only be used to point out that עִזָּאֵל is a parallel term to יְהוָה, requiring, if anything, that the former is also the name of a deity. Anything more would be speculation.⁴⁵

The next argument does not provide real support either. Although wilderness and ruins were believed to be the haunting place of demons in ancient religions as well as in later traditions (e.g. Bar 4:35; Tob 8:3; Matt 12: 43; Luke 11:24; Rev 18:2), this cannot be used as proof that the creatures referred to in the above-mentioned passages would be ‘demons’. This has to be determined from the context.⁴⁶

2.2.4 Summary azazel

All interpretations are based on scholars’ attempts to explain the etymology of azazel. The most popular view is that it is the name of a ‘demon’, though there are other possibilities. This view is based on one or more of four arguments. A few scholars point to the parallel expressions לְעִזָּאֵל and לַיהוָה, the parallelism requiring that both be personal names. The fact that azazel is a name, however, does not imply it being a ‘demon’ i.e. ‘evil spirit’.⁴⁷ Some scholars also argue that the belief that ‘demons’ inhabit the desert can be found in the Hebrew Bible (citing Lev 17:7, Isa 13:21, 34:14; cf. Matt 12:43) and since azazel is found in the desert therefore it must be a ‘demon’/evil spirit. The ‘demon’ approach by and large is based on attempts to explain the etymology of the term with the help of ancient Near Eastern parallels and/or finding from the ancient Near East similar rites to the one described in Lev 16, and on similarities with the Book Enoch chs 1-6 which features a demon called Asael or Azazel. These comparisons are valuable in that they highlight various similarities (e.g. between the characters or the rites compared, between the literary works compared, etc.), but at the same time differences should ⁴⁵ See also below 3.2.

⁴⁶ See the analysis of Lev 16 below in 3.2, and of Isa 34 in 4.2.2-4.2.3.

⁴⁷ Cf. 1.2, p. 11.

J. Blair 2. History of research also be carefully considered (e.g. cultural, historical, literary genre, etc.).

Etymological explanations can be interesting; however, they do not reveal anything about azazel's character or function, and should be treated with caution.

To conclude: to interpret azazel most scholars seek to explain its etymology and turn to ancient Near Eastern parallels or the Book of Enoch.

2.3 The interpretation of lilith in the Hebrew Bible

Oesterley and Robinson list lilith as one of the anthropomorphic 'demons' that appear in the Hebrew Bible, not only in Isa 34:14 but also in Ps 91, as the 'night-terror' (p. 118). Langton also believes that lilith in Isa 34:14 is the Babylonian Lilītu demon as that is the general consensus based on the similarity of the name and that 'according to rabbinic teaching Lilith was the night demon par excellence' (pp. 47-48). T. Gaster argues that RSV's rendering of the Hebrew term as 'night-hag' is based on the traditional error of associating the term with 'night' when in fact it is a reference to Lilith the Sumerian/Mesopotamian demoness.⁴⁸ Modern scholars similarly take the single occurrence in Isa 34:14 to be a reference to the Mesopotamian/Jewish demoness without question, and some even argue that she appears in other passages as well although not named.⁴⁹

The literature on Lilith is vast. She inspired not only scholars but poets and painters and even contemporary feminists.⁵⁰

⁴⁸ Gaster (Myth, pp. 578-580 and n. 1 and 2, p. 697) as Langton (n. 35, p. 47) before him, follows R. C. Thompson, Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia: Being Babylonian and Assyrian Incantations against the Demons, Ghouls, Vampires, Hobgoblins, Ghosts, and Kindred Evil Spirits, which Attack Mankind (London: Luzac, 1903-4), pp. xxiii, xxxvi-xxxviii, who derived Lilith from Sumerian lil, 'wind', which term was then adopted by the Babylonians as lilu or the feminine form lilitu.

⁴⁹ Examples include Burrelli, pp. 68-78 (see also above ch.1, pp. 6-7); M. Hutter, 'Lilith' in DDD, pp. 520-521; Keel, 'Schwache', p. 222 and Fabry, p. 270. Fabry sees a reference to Lilith in Job 18:15 too. See also p. 9 above. Commentators such as Kaiser, Watts, Brueggemann, Miscall also follow this view. See 4.2.3 and notes.

⁵⁰ A very good survey of the history of the development of Lilith is found in R. Patai, The Hebrew Goddess (New York: Ktav, 1967), pp. 207-245, 318-322. See also Langdon, pp. 361-364; Langton, pp. 16, 47-48; S. Hurwitz, Lilith, die erste Eva: Eine Studie über dunkle Aspekte der Weiblichkeit (Zurich: Daimon Verlag, 1980); G. Scholem, 'Lilith', *EncJud*¹, XI, pp. 245-249; Hutter, pp. 520-521; T. Gaster, Myth, pp. 578-580; M. Gaster, 'Two Thousand Years of a Charm Against the Child-Stealing Witch', Folklore 11 (June, 1900), 129-162; J. Montgomery, 'The Lilith Legend', The Museum Journal 4 (1913), 62-65; H. Schwartz, 'Jewish Tales of the Supernatural', Judaism 36 (1987), 339-351; R. Lesses, 'Exe(o)rcising Power: Women as Sorceresses, Exorcists, and Demonesses in Babylonian Jewish Society of Late Antiquity', JAAR 69 no.2 (2001), 343-375. On Lilith in Qumran see J. M. Baumgarten, 'On the Nature of the Seductress in 4Q184', Revue de Qumran 15 (1991-92), 133-143; 'The seductress of Qumran', Bible Review 17 no 5 (2001), 21-23; 42.

J. Blair 2. History of research

The opening lines of Gaines' article are characteristic of the popular view of this demoness.

For 4000 years Lilith has wandered the earth, figuring in the mythic imaginations of writers, artists and poets. Her dark origins lie in Babylonian demonology, where amulets and incantations were used to counter the sinister powers of this winged spirit who preyed on pregnant women and infants. Lilith next migrated to the world of the ancient Hittites, Egyptians, Israelites and Greeks. She makes a solitary appearance in the Bible, as a wilderness demon shunned by the prophet Isaiah. In the Middle Ages she reappears in Jewish sources as the dreadful first wife of Adam. In the Renaissance, Michelangelo portrayed Lilith as a half-woman, half-serpent, coiled around the Tree of Knowledge. Later, her beauty would captivate the English poet Dante Gabriel Rossetti. "Her enchanted hair", he wrote, "was the first gold". Irish novelist James Joyce cast her as the "patron of abortions." Modern feminists celebrate her bold struggle for independence from Adam. Her name appears as the title of a Jewish women's magazine and a national literacy program. An annual music festival that donates its profits to battered women's shelters and breast cancer research institutes is called the Lilith Fair. (p.12)

2.3.1 Lilith in the ancient Near East and post-biblical Judaism

Lilith was possibly derived from Lilītu and Ardat Lili who were the female counterparts of the male demon, Lil in Sumerian demonology,⁵¹ and she possibly appears in Sumerian mythology, in the epic poem of Gilgamesh and the Huluppu-

P. S. Alexander, ' "Wrestling Against Wickedness in High Places": Magic in the Worldview of the Qumran Community' in The Scrolls and the Scriptures: Qumran Fifty Years After, ed. by S. E. Porter and C. A. Evans (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997), pp. 318-337; P. S. Alexander, 'The Demonology of the Dead Sea Scrolls' in The Dead Sea Scrolls After Fifty Years: A Comprehensive Assessment, ed. by P. W. Flint and J. C. Vanderkam (Leiden: Brill, 1999), II, pp. 335-357. For feminist interpretation of Lilith see e.g. J. Plaskow Goldenberg, 'Epilogue: The Coming Of Lilith' in Religion and Sexism: Images of Woman in the Jewish and Christian Traditions, ed. by R. Radford Ruether (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1974), pp. 341-343; J. Weinberg, 'All You Ever Wanted to know about Lilith! Lilith Sources', Lilith, The Independent Jewish Women's Magazine (premier issue, Fall 1976). Lilith appears in poems by J. Faust, R. Browning, Dante Gabriel Rossetti and more recently by Enid Dame, Pamela Hadas (J. H. Gaines, 'Seductress, Heroine or Murderer', Bible Review 5 vol.17 (2001), 12-20; 43-44. See pp. 18-19 and 43-44; for discussion and reference of these). She is also the heroine in the Scottish writer G. Macdonald, Lilith: a romance. In 'Changing Literary Representations of Lilith and the Evolution of a Mythical Heroine' Amy Scerba traces the development of Lilith from mythology and early Jewish texts through the Romantic period, focusing on the influence of Dante Gabriel Rossetti in transforming Lilith the demoness into a feminist heroine. [<http://feminism.eserver.org/lilith/>] [Accessed 2007-04-26].

⁵¹ See for example R. Thompson, pp. xxiii, xxxvi-xxxviii; S. N. Kramer, Sumerian Mythology: A Study of Spiritual and Literary Achievement in the Third Millenium B. C. (Philadelphia: The American Philosophical Society, 1944); History Begins at Sumer (London: Thames & Hudson, 1958); Cradle of Civilization (Amsterdam: Time-Life, 1969).

J. Blair 2. History of research

Tree, though the translation is not certain as the demoness appearing there is called Líláke.⁵²

For Lilith's next appearance the Burney relief is usually quoted, which also dates from about 2000 BCE. On this we have the representation of a beautiful naked woman with wings and feet of a bird, standing on two lions and flanked by two owls.⁵³ However, there is no inscription identifying her as Lilith, thus such identification is far from certain. Th. Jacobsen has convincingly argued that the figure is rather a representation of Inanna.⁵⁴

On a seventh or eighth century BCE limestone plaque, discovered at Arslan Tash, Syria, we have an incantation to expel child-killing demons. Scholars think that the plaque hung in the house of a pregnant woman and served as protection against the attention of these demons. Traditionally this has been regarded as containing a reference to Lilith, but this is only with the addition of a missing t.⁵⁵ The reading of ll wyn 'night and day' instead of lly[... Lili[th is equally possible].⁵⁶

Thus far none of the traditionally cited references to Lilith can be relied upon as certain. Other references come from post-Biblical sources. Thus it has been argued ⁵² The tablet dates from about 2000 BCE. The huluppu-tree, planted and nurtured on the banks of the Euphrates, was uprooted by the South Wind. A wandering goddess found it and planted it in Inanna's garden in Uruk. There she (Inanna) looked after it for ten years with love and care intending to use its wood, once matured, for a throne and bed for herself. However, her plans failed as in the meantime three creatures made their home in the tree. A dragon ('the snake who knows no charm') had set up its nest at the base of the tree, the Zu-bird had placed its young in its crown, and in its midst the demoness Líláke (šab-bi-a ki-sikil-lí-lá-ke) had built her house. Gilgamesh hearing of the goddess' distress came to her aid and slayed the dragon. At this the bird flees with its young to the mountain and the terror-stricken demoness tears down her house and escapes to the desert. See S. N. Kramer, Gilgames and the Huluppu-Tree: A reconstructed Sumerian Text, The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Assyriological Studies No. 10 (Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1938).

⁵³ Patai, p. 208, and E. G. Kraeling, 'A Unique Babylonian Relief', BASOR 67 (1937), 16-18, identify the figure with Lilith.

⁵⁴ 'Pictures and Pictorial Language (The Burney Relief)' in Figurative Language in the Ancient Near East ed. by M. Mindin (London: Routledge Chapman and Hall, 1997), pp. 1-24.

⁵⁵ For a discussion of this incantation see W. A. Albright, 'An Aramean Magical Text in Hebrew From the Seventh century B.C.', BASOR 76 (1939), 5-11; T. H. Gaster, 'A Canaanite Magical Text', Or 11 (1942), 41-79; H. Torczyner, 'A Hebrew Incantation Against Night-Demons from Biblical Times', JNES 6 (1947), 18-29; T. H. Gaster, 'The Magical Inscription from Arslan Tash', JNES 6 (1947), 186-188. While Gaster maintains that the inscription is against the 'child-stealing vampire' Lamaštu=Lilith, Torczyner argues that the incantation is directed against the demons of darkness in general.

⁵⁶ Hutter, p. 521 cf. Butterweck; Scholem, p. 246.

J. Blair 2. History of research that she appears in Qumran in 1QIsa^a 57, 4Q510⁵⁸ and possibly 4Q184⁵⁹. The latter is not at all certain; on the one hand it relies on the author's view that in the description of the harlot/seductress there is a strong emphasis on her underworld connections, and on the other hand on the identification of the figure on the Burney relief with Lilith which as we have seen is questioned. Other possible interpretations exist.⁶⁰

In 1QIsa^a at Isa 34:14 we have לִילִיּוֹת, a plural form, and in 4Q510 (// 4Q511), which is probably a sectarian text that contains a list of classes of demons, לִילִיָּת, together with אֵיִם and צֵיִם, though the latter is uncertain.⁶¹ Alexander argues that lilith is used generically in both texts as in Qumran demons were not regarded as male or female. Further he shows that although demonology in Qumran is more developed than in the biblical texts, still 'the demonic world of Qumran is nowhere near as elaborate as the demonic world envisaged in many of the later pagan Greek, Christian and Jewish magical texts'.⁶² Thus although there is mention of a לִילִיָּת in Qumran, there is no significant information on the nature of Lilith.

References to a demoness who has many names and moves about at night, visiting women in childbirth and strangling their newborn babies is found in the apocryphal work, The Testament of Solomon, dating from around the 1st-4th centuries CE. However, there the female demon is called Obyzouth. She tells King Solomon that her work is limited to 'killing newborn infants, injuring eyes, condemning mouths, destroying minds, and making bodies feel pain.'⁶³ In the Talmud the lilith appears as a female demon with wings⁶⁴ and long hair who presents a danger to men sleeping alone at night.⁶⁵ Gaines pointed out that these characteristics are more reminiscent of the Babylonian images of ardat lili demons (p. 16).

⁵⁷ Alexander, 'Demonology', p. 336.

⁵⁸ Alexander, 'Wrestling', p. 321.

⁵⁹ Baumgarten, 'Seductress', pp. 135- 143.

⁶⁰ See Baumgarten, 'Seductress', n. 19-21 on p. 138 for references.

⁶¹ Alexander, 'Demonology', n. 8 p. 333.

⁶² 'Demonology', p. 336. Qumran demonology shows a marked Enochic influence which cannot be said of the biblical books. On this see Alexander, 'Wrestling', p. 322 and 'Demonology', pp. 337-344.

⁶³ Testament of Solomon, 13:1-4 (OTP). M. Gaster, pp. 158-159; Schwartz, p. 343.

⁶⁴ Niddah 24b, in J. Neusner, The Talmud of Babylonia: An American Translation, XXXVI.A: Niddah chapters 1-3 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1990), p. 120.

⁶⁵ Erubin 100b, in J. Neusner, The Talmud of Babylonia: An American Translation, III.D: Erubin chapters 7-10 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1993), p. 110.

J. Blair 2. History of research

In Aramaic incantation texts found in Nippur, Babylonia, dating from about 600 CE, these characteristics were attributed to the lilith.⁶⁶ These texts show that she was regarded as ‘the ghostly paramour for men’ as well as a special danger for women during their most vulnerable periods. During childbirth the mother and the baby both had to be protected from lilith (or liliths).⁶⁷ According to some of these incantation bowls, she also attacked children, even her own. She was accused of ‘striking boys and girls’ and according to one text she ‘destroys and kills and tears and strangles and eats boys and girls’.⁶⁸ Similarly to Qumran, on the incantation bowls lilith seems to be a generic term rather than referring to one specific demon. They appear as a combination of the Mesopotamian lilu/lilitu/ardat lili succubus/incubus type demons and Lamaštu, the child killing demoness.⁶⁹

Lilith as the first wife of Adam appears in post-talmudic literature, in the 8th century Alphabet of Ben Sira.⁷⁰ Here we find the story of how Lilith had become a child-stealing and strangling demon. It is suggested that she is driven to kill babies in retaliation for God’s punishment that every day one hundred of her children would be killed.⁷¹ The ancient lilith/liliths gradually developed into Lilith, the most feared demon of Judaism, and by the time of Jewish mysticism she acquired a whole new mythological background regarding her birth, her relationship with Adam and even with God in the Zohar and other later Kabbalistic writings.⁷²

⁶⁶ Lesses, pp. 343-375. Lilith appears in both singular and plural forms together with the male lili demons (p. 354).

⁶⁷ Patai, pp. 211-217; Gaines, p. 16; Lesses, pp. 354-361.

⁶⁸ Lesses, p. 356; Patai, pp. 211-217.

⁶⁹ Lesses, p. 356. On Lamaštu see for example D. W. Myhrman, ‘Die Labartu-Texte’, ZA 16 (1902), 141-200; F. Thureau-Dangin, ‘Rituel et amulettes contre Labartu’, RA 18 (1921), 161-198; D. R. West, Some Cults of Greek Goddesses and Female Daemons of Oriental Origin (Neukirchen Vluyn: Verlag Butzon & Bercker Kevelaer, 1995); p. 252-297; J. Black and A. Green, Gods, Demons and Symbols of Ancient Mesopotamia (GDS): An Illustrated Dictionary (London: British Museum Press, 1992), pp. 115-116; J. Nougayrol, ‘La Lamaštu A Ugarit’, Ugaritica VI (1969), 393-408.

⁷⁰ This anonymous medieval work exists in several versions. Some scholars argue that it is a parody on parts of the Talmud and Midrash, a kind of ‘academic burlesque’ or even entertainment for rabbinic scholars. See N. Bronznik, ‘The Alphabet of Ben Sira’ in Rabbinic Fantasies: Imaginative Narratives from Classical Hebrew Literature, ed. by David Stern and Mark J. Mirsky, Yale Judaica series XXIX (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1990), pp. 167-202.

⁷¹ M. Gaster, pp. 155- 157; Scholem, p. 246. Gaines has a feminist perspective on this, and writes that ultimately all this was brought on Lilith because of Adam (pp.16-20).

⁷² On Lilith in Kabbalistic writings see Gaines, pp.20, 42-43; Patai, pp. 217-229. Various legends associated Lilith with King Solomon (identifying her with the Queen of Sheba), and she appears as the consort of Samael. (Scholem, p. 248)

J. Blair 2. History of research

One form of the Lilith legend was inscribed on amulets, and these up until the twentieth century were hung in Jewish houses, in the room where a child was born.⁷³

The Lilith-legend has parallels in Christian literature from Byzantine and later periods. M. Gaster argued that he could trace its history following the same legend through the ages, from its Mesopotamian beginnings to Greek, Byzantine, Syriac, Slavonic, Romanian and Modern Greek literature.⁷⁴ Lamaštu and Lilith of the ancient eastern cultures were identified with the child-stealing witch of the western cultures.⁷⁵

2.3.2 Summary lilith

We have seen that earlier scholars (e.g. T. H. Gaster, M. Gaster, Langton, Oesterley and Robinson, Thompson) as well as modern ones (e.g. Brueggemann, Kaiser, Wildberger, Watts, Burrelli, Miscall, Keel and Fabry) believe that לִילִית in Isa 34:14 is the name of the demoness Lilith.⁷⁶ It is difficult to understand such a conclusion in view of the lack of supporting arguments other than the mention of the similarity of the Hebrew term לִילִית to the Sumerian/ Mesopotamian lilitu/ardat lili demons, and the Lilith of later Jewish tradition.

⁷³ M. Gaster, pp. 149-150; Montgomery, pp. 64-65.

⁷⁴ Pp. 129-162; Montgomery, pp.62-65.

⁷⁵ Some scholars argue that in fact it was Lamaštu who returned in new form in all the stories about the child-killing demoness. See H. D. Betz, 'Jewish Magic in the Greek Magical Papyri' in Envisioning Magic ed. by Schafer, Kippenberg (Leiden: Brill, 1997), pp. 45-63; M. Gaster, W. Burkert, 'Lamashtu, Lamia and Gorgo' in The Orientalizing Revolution: Near Eastern Influence on Greek Culture in the Early Archaic Age (Cambridge MA: Harvard University Press, 1992), pp. 82-87. The following is used in support: 1) the description of Obyzouth in The Testament of Solomon is identical to the Greek Gorgon and Medusa. 2) Lamia's name is derived from Lamaštu (Hutter, pp. 520-521; D. R. West, 'Gello and Lamia: Two Hellenic daemons of Semitic origin', UF 23 (1992), 361-368), and this is how some ancient versions of the OT translate the Isa 34:14 passage (e.g. Symmachos and Jerome's Vulgate cf. Hutter, p. 521). 3) Betz further argues that Gello (or Gyllu) who is known as a powerful demon threatening to kill babies and small children is a development of Lamaštu in the Middle Ages (p. 61). Other scholars argue to the contrary and believe that despite the many similarities these demons evolved and developed within their own environment. Thus S. I. Johnston, 'Defining the Dreadful: remarks on the Greek Child-Killing Demon' in Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, ed. by M. Meyer and P. Mirecki (Leiden: Brill, 2001), pp. 361-387. There could be truth in both arguments; it is likely that Lamaštu had some kind of influence in the development of Lilith and the Greek child-killing demons which in turn spread to the west. With diplomatic and trade relations there is an exchange of ideas too. Thus it is not surprising that cultures very often adopt supernatural beings of another and then adapt them to their own environment. On the other hand child-killing demons exist in every culture because they personify universal fears, the risk and dangers of pregnancy, childbirth and infancy to both the mother and child.

⁷⁶ NJB, NRS also have Lilith.

J. Blair 2. History of research

Lilith had started out more as a type of demon than as a specific one. From the available evidence we saw that the traditionally cited early evidence for her occurrence is uncertain, and up until the end of the Talmudic period the sources mention both lilith and liliths. It was in the Middle Ages when a demoness Lilith with an elaborate mythology emerged.

To conclude: to interpret lilith in Isa 34:14 scholars refer to the similarity of the term with the name of a demon known from Mesopotamia and later Jewish belief and seem to ignore the fact that such interpretation does not fit the context.

2.4 History of research on deber

T. Witton Davies does not list deber (neither qeteb nor reshef) amongst the ‘demons’ of the Old Testament. Oesterley and Robinson as well as Langton identify deber in Ps 91 with Namtar, ‘the pestilence that goes about in the dark’, as one of four demons mentioned in the passage.⁷⁷

The title of Caquot’s article, ‘Sur Quelques Démons de L’Ancien Testament (Reshep, Qeteb, Deber)’⁷⁸ already reveals how he sees these three terms functioning in the Hebrew Bible. His starting point is that the Old Testament contains vestiges of an ancient Canaanite religion and he seems to be aiming to reconstruct such. The main part of his article is centred on Reshef, no doubt because far more material has survived referring to this ancient Semitic deity than to any of the other two (i.e. Deber or Qeteb). It is this deity that Caquot believes to make an appearance in Hab 3:5 along with deber, which, according to him, thus must also be a proper name. He writes: ‘Quand on sait que Reshep est le nom d’une divinité sémitique, il n’est rien de plus naturel que de le trouver ici, dans un contexte de couleur nettement mythologique.’ (p. 57) Caquot accepts the usual translation of ‘plague/pestilence’ (‘peste’) for deber, and argues that in this passage one is led to see both reshef and deber as ‘personified symbols of Yahweh’s awesome power’ (p. 57). But while he looks at all the occurrences of reshef and qeteb in the Hebrew Bible, he does not discuss deber in any detail, only in relation to the other two. Caquot’s conclusion is cautious but suggestive. While he asserts that lack of evidence does not allow one to ⁷⁸ Italics are mine.

⁷⁷ The others are Lilith, referred to as the ‘night-terror’, Qeteb, referred to as ‘the destruction that wastes at midday’, and the unidentified ‘arrow that flies in the daytime’ (Hebrew Religion, p. 118).

J. Blair 2. History of research claim the existence of a deity dbr that the ancient Israelites would have reduced to a subservient role to Yahweh, as they did with Reshef and Qeteb, he suggests that yet ‘We can have an inkling that he is a demonic being, agent of Sheol’ (p. 68).

T. H. Gaster writes that similarly to Reshef, Deber is ‘a demonic figure of ancient folklore’, and refers to Ps 91:5-6 where it appears in the company of a ‘coven of demons’. He is the ‘Pestilence that stalks in darkness’, and the others are the ‘Terror by Night’, the ‘Arrow that flies by day’ (taken to be a reference to Reshef), and the ‘Destruction that ravages at noon’. Gaster takes the term to mean ‘reverse, catastrophe’ from Akkadian dab/pāru, ‘thrust back’.⁷⁹

While on the one hand Gaster believes that names of ‘demons’ occur in the Hebrew Bible, and that this points to a mythological background, nevertheless he cautions when talking about ‘OT demonology’, stressing that this does not necessarily point to a living belief in ‘demons’. These names could simply have survived as ‘figures of speech’.⁸⁰ On the other hand N. J. Tromp argues that ‘there is sufficient evidence to go beyond this stage’, and he feels that it is ‘justified’ to conclude that ‘in the OT the personification is more than a petrified form of speech’ in the light of the available evidence.⁸¹ The mythological description of death is more than poetical device; he believes that it serves to show death to be a ‘personal power’.

Tromp argues that deber is one of Death’s servants or messengers. Death (Mot) had a number of ‘associates’, demon helpers who usually came in pairs,⁸² thus deber and reshef appear together in Hab 3:5 and Deut 32:23, and deber and qeteb in Ps 91:6 and Hos 13:14.⁸³

Del Olmo also accepts the usual meaning of ‘pestilence’ for deber, which he believes to be a specific ‘Hebrew development’.⁸⁴ He notes that: ‘Deber is one of the three ⁷⁹ Myths, p. 771 and n. 28 p. 853.

⁸⁰ IDB I, 818B.

⁸¹ Primitive Conceptions of Death and the Nether World in the Old Testament, Biblica et Orientalia 21 (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1969), pp. 160-166.

⁸² Messengers usually come in pairs in the Ugaritic Baal cycle. See for example N. Wyatt, Religious Texts from Ugarit (RTU), 2nd rev. edn (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002), p.40 n. 10.

⁸³ Tromp uses Nicolsky in support who claimed that dbr and qtb are demonic beings in alliance with Sheol and Death. See Tromp, n 16 p. 163 for reference.

⁸⁴ ‘Deber’, pp. 231- 232. In this he follows CAD (‘dibiru’ in CAD vol. D, pp. 134-135) and B. Meisner, Beiträge zum Assyrischen Wörterbuch vol 1 part I (Chicago: The University of Chicago

J. Blair 2. History of research proverbial causes of death on a wide scale', perhaps referring to its frequent occurrence with 'war' and 'famine' in Jeremiah and Ezekiel. He also asserts that it occurs in 'a personified sense as a demon or evil deity' in three passages, Hab 3:5; Ps 91:3; cf. Hos 13:14.⁸⁵ Similarly, J. Day argues that deber occurs personified as Plague in Hab 3:5 because of its parallel position with Reshef. He further believes that based on the Eblaite evidence it is possible that a god lies behind this figure.⁸⁶ Of the other occurrences of deber he discusses Ps 78 and 91, but his focus is on Reshef. He takes deber as a common noun in the usual sense of 'pestilence' and not as personified.⁸⁷

It seems that, as Caquot and Gaster, del Olmo and Day also come to the conclusion that deber is a 'demon'/evil deity because of its occurrence with reshef,⁸⁸ while for Tromp the association with Death is decisive. In addition Caquot, del Olmo and Day also believe that possibly an Eblaite deity Dabir is the mythological figure behind the deber of the Hebrew Bible.

2.4.1 Deber in the ancient Near East

It is generally agreed that there is a mythological figure behind the deber of the Hebrew Bible. As mentioned above, this is generally considered to be Dabir from Ebla. However, there are also suggestions that point to Ugarit for a possible link.⁸⁹ We shall now consider these.

2.4.1.1 Ebla

The Eblaite tablet TM. 75.G.1464 v. XI 12-18 mentions a deity Dabir:

Press, 1931), p. 34; W. von Soden, Akkadisches Handwörterbuch, band I (Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1965), p. 168.

⁸⁵ 'Deber', p. 232.

⁸⁶ Yahweh and the gods and goddesses of Canaan, JSOT Supp 265 (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002), pp. 200-201 (p. 199).

⁸⁷ As above, pp. 199-208, n. 12.

⁸⁸ This is also explicitly stated by C. A. Keller, in his commentary on Hab 3:5 in Nahoum, Habacuc, Sophonie (Paris: Delachaux et Niestlé, 1971). He writes: 'רָשַׁף Fièvre est dans les textes cananéens un démon ou un dieu de l'enfer,...., et bien que רַב־בַּר Peste ne soit pas directement attesté comme tel, son association avec רָשַׁף suggère que lui aussi est conçu comme un démon...' (p. 171)

⁸⁹ Del Olmo, 'Deber', p. 232.

^d*da-bi-ir dingir ib-la^{ki}*

Dabir, god of Ebla

G. Pettinato argues that the title suggests that Dabir was a patron god of the city of Ebla.⁹⁰ However, F. Pomponio and P. Xella question this hypothesis.⁹¹ They rightly point out that the evidence is not enough to support such an interpretation. Further, they argue that, although an element *da-bir*₅ appears in onomastics, it is always without the divine determinative. This in fact could be an epithet, not a theonyme. However, the fact that, out of six personal names formed with this element three belonged to non-Eblaites, weakens a hypothesis of Dabir being a great protector deity of Ebla (p. 124). This leads Pomponio and Xella to conclude that the only possibility left is to consider Dabir ‘comme la désignation d’un autre dieu’. Unfortunately, at this point they too engage in speculation; appealing on etymological grounds to the dbr in the Hebrew Bible and its association with Reshef and Qeteb, ‘tous des anciens dieux cananéens réduit à l’état d’agents aux ordres de YHWH.’ (p. 124) On this basis they suggest an identification of Dabir with Rasap (i.e. Reshef), a well-known Eblaitite deity.⁹²

From the above it is clear that a deity Dabir was known in Ebla, his name formed an element in proper names. However, the evidence available at present is too scant to allow any further conclusions regarding the deity’s character, nature or association with other divinities.

2.4.1.2 Ugarit

In the Ugaritic texts dbr appears in KTU 1.5 vi: 6-7 as ars dbr, and in 1.5 v: 17-21 as bdbr, in both texts in parallel with šd šhlmmt.

KTU 1.5 v: 17-21⁹³

k mtt . yšm‘. aliyn. b‘l.	Aliyan Baal obeyed,
yuhb. ‘gl. b dbr. prt	he loved a heifer in dbr
b šd. šhlmmt. škb	A (young)cow in the field of šhlmmt
‘mnh. šb‘. l šb‘m.	He lay with her seventy-seven times,

⁹⁰ The Archives of Ebla: An Empire Inscribed in Clay (Garden City: Doubleday, 1981), pp. 247, 296.

⁹¹ Les dieux d’Ebla: Étude analytique des divinités éblaites à l’époque des archives royales du IIIe millénaire (Münster: Ugarit -Verlag, 1997), pp. 123-124.

⁹² On Reshef see below 2.6.

⁹³ Text taken from KTU, p. 24, translation is mine.

J. Blair 2. History of research tš'ly. ṭmn. l ṭmnym. (...) eighty-eight times.

Various translations have been offered for dbr, as is evident from the summary given by van Zijl.⁹⁴ More recently de Moor translated it as 'steppe',⁹⁵ and Wyatt as 'pastureland'.⁹⁶ Both van Zijl⁹⁷ and Sivan⁹⁸ believe it to be a place name and prefer to leave it untranslated.

KTU 1.5 vi: 6-7⁹⁹

l n'my arš dbr we arrived to the pleasantness of the land of dbr

l ysmt šd šhlmmt to the beauty of the field of šhlmmt

The same translation is given for dbr here as above.¹⁰⁰

It is clear that the meaning of the Ugaritic word is questionable. Its occurrence in parallel with šd šhlmmt does not throw much light on it as the meaning of this term in turn is also problematic. Šd means 'field',¹⁰¹ šhlmmt is taken by de Moor, Wyatt and Dahood as šhl mmt, šhl being related on the one hand to either the Arabic sāhil, 'shore, coast', or to Syriac šāh^elā, 'stream', and mmt taken as meaning 'the place of death'. The expression thus translates 'the coastal plain of the realm of death', or 'the steppe by the shore of death' or 'the stream of the realm of death'.¹⁰² On the other hand, Dahood identifies šhl with Hebrew שָׁחַל, 'lion', and mmt with מְמִית, thus the ⁹⁴ P. J. van Zijl, Baal: a Study of Texts in Connexion with Baal in the Ugaritic Epics (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Verlag Butzon & Bercker Kevelaer, 1972), pp. 172-173. He groups the translations into four. Some scholars, e.g. Driver, translate 'disease' on the basis of taking the Hebrew deber to mean 'pestilence'; others, e.g. Gray, translate 'in the Back of Beyond'. The third group, e.g. Aisleitner, take the word to be cognate with Hebrew dōber and give 'pasture', while the fourth group, including Zijl, take dbr to be a place name, thus 'Land of Grazing' or 'the land Dbr'.

⁹⁵ J. C. de Moor, The Seasonal Pattern in the Ugaritic Myth of Ba'lu: According to the Version of Ilmilku (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Verlag Butzon & Bercker Kevelaer, 1971), pp. 183-186; An Anthology of Religious Texts from Ugarit (ARTU) (Leiden: Brill, 1987), p.78 and n. 377 on that page.

⁹⁶ Wyatt, RTU, p. 124 and n. 47.

⁹⁷ See n. 94 above.

⁹⁸ D. Sivan, A Grammar of the Ugaritic Language (Leiden: Brill, 2001), pp. 257-258.

⁹⁹ As n. 93 above.

¹⁰⁰ E.g. Zijl, pp. 175—177; de Moor, ARTU, p. 79; Wyatt, RTU, p. 126.

¹⁰¹ DUL, II, pp. 807-809.

¹⁰² See discussion in de Moor, Seasonal Pattern, pp. 186-187; Wyatt, RTU, p. 124 n. 48.

J. Blair 2. History of research expression for him translates as ‘field of the lion who slays’.¹⁰³ This is deemed unlikely by del Olmo.¹⁰⁴

The context of the poem is that of the death of Baal, i.e. his journey down into the Nether World. Thus both suggestions, i.e. that dbr is a place name and that it is related to the realm of death, are equally possible. Personification, however, is questionable.¹⁰⁵

2.4.2 Summary deber

From the above discussion we can see that it is generally held by scholars that deber appears in a personified sense as the name of a ‘demon’ or evil deity in three places in the Hebrew Bible: Ps 91:5-6, Hos 13:14 and Hab 3:5. The accepted meaning of the term is ‘plague’ or ‘pestilence’, and since in Mesopotamian belief diseases were attributed to or personified as demons, early 20th century scholars (Oesterley and Robinson, Langton) identified deber in the Hebrew Bible with the Mesopotamian Namtar.¹⁰⁶ Modern scholars ‘demonised’ deber because of its association with reshef, based on the view that ancient Near Eastern deities appearing in the Hebrew Bible were regarded as ‘demons’ by the Yahwists. Since a deity Reshef was well known in the ancient Near East, a divine figure was also sought for deber, and it was found in the Eblaite god Dabir.

To conclude: to interpret deber scholars look to ancient Near Eastern parallels and/or its occurrence together with reshef in two of the usually cited three passages and ignore the examination of the term in the remaining 45 verses (see n. 1 on p. 104).

2.5 History of research on qeteb

According to Oesterley and Robinson Qeteb is the name of an ‘anthropomorphic demon’.¹⁰⁷ Even if the term was not a proper name at the time of the writing of Ps ¹⁰³ M. Dahood, Ras Shamra Parallels: The Texts from Ugarit and the Hebrew Bible, An Or 51 (Roma: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1981), pp. 54-55.

¹⁰⁴ ‘Deber’, p. 232.

¹⁰⁵ Del Olmo, ‘Deber’, p. 232.

¹⁰⁶ Namtar was an underworld deity, bringer of death, sometimes associated with plague. See CAD XI, 248 b.; Riley, p. 237; S. A. Meier, ‘Destroyer’, DDD, pp. 240-244 (240-241); T. J. Lewis, ‘First-Born of Death’, DDD, pp.332-335 (333-334).

¹⁰⁷ Along with others such as Lilith, Aluqah and Namtar (pp. 117, 120).

J. Blair 2. History of research

91, it became so later, and it certainly refers to a ‘demon’ in the psalm according to the writers. The supporting evidence for Oesterly and Robinson comes from the fact that qeteb occurs in Deut 32:24 ‘where the context clearly refers to the activity of demons’, that in Hos 13:14 it occurs with sheol, that it is apparently parallel with Mesopotamian Nergal, the LXX’s reference to a ‘midday demon’ in Ps 91, and that in rabbinic literature Qeteb is the name of a demon (p. 120).

Later Jewish belief and the occurrence together with deber are the reasons for Langton to include qeteb amongst the ‘demons’ (pp.49-50).

Caquot looks at all four occurrences of qeteb briefly, starting with Deut 32:24, where he argues that qeteb’s association with reshef is significant. Qeteb meriri is ‘un autre personnage ou personification associé à Reshep’. Caquot finds the ‘hesitation’ of the ancient versions to translate this term rather ‘revelatory’ and perhaps due to misinterpretation.¹⁰⁸ Modern translators’ rendering of qeteb as ‘bitter plague’ is due to its parallel occurrence with deber, e.g. in Hos 13:14. Caquot’s treatment of this text is rather short, he simply states that the text ‘gains colour’ if one recognizes in deber and qeteb the evil powers, auxiliaries of Sheol and Death (p. 66). He does not elaborate on why he regards them as ‘evil powers’. In Ps 91:6 he notes that here qeteb appears again in parallel with deber. Accepting the usual translation for deber as ‘pestilence’, Caquot argues that a similar meaning could be sought for qeteb. However, for him it is Isa 28:2 that sheds the real light on this term. Looking at this passage he asserts that qeteb is presented here as a force present and residing in the hurricane. He appears to be following the Targum’s interpretation in this.¹⁰⁹ In the light of this passage then Caquot argues that in Ps 91:6 qeteb would be the hot wind which is particularly troublesome in the middle of the day.¹¹⁰ Caquot concludes that qeteb is the personification of the evil, parching and suffocating wind which makes ¹⁰⁸ For example Targ. Onqelos has the general ‘evil spirits’; Rashi takes meriri as a demon. LXX finds for qeteb a term that belongs to ‘the most technical medical language’, οπισθοτονος, ‘the illness that bends backwards’, which may be a description of a symptom associated with epilepsy (‘Quelques’, p.65). For Targ. Onqelos see B. Grossfeld (ed.), The Targum Onqelos to Deuteronomy, Aramaic Bible 9 (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1988), pp. 96-97.

¹⁰⁹ Caquot, ‘Quelques’, p. 67, argues that LXX does not see the term functioning in this way but here the Targum’s translation seems the correct one (‘as a tempest of hail in a hurricane’).

¹¹⁰ He notes (p. 67) that this interpretation has been suggested by others too (see n. 2 p. 67), and it is supported by the Syriac version (‘the wind that blows at midday’).

J. Blair 2. History of research

the heat insufferable. It is not surprising that ‘this disagreeable reality’ was personified as a ‘demon’.¹¹¹

Caquot takes this argument further and based on his association with reshef, he considers the possibility that behind the ‘demon’ qeteb there is also a deity. ‘On peut ainsi discerner sous le démon Qeteb les traits d’un dieu oublié de l’ouragan, c’est-à-dire, encore une fois, d’un “Wetter-gott”, et, par là même, d’un grand dieu.’¹¹²

Another proponent of the ‘demonological’ interpretation of qeteb, T. Gaster, argues that of the seven ‘evils’ listed in Deut 32:24 ‘several of them, such as the “faery arrows”, the monstrous Resheph, and the “poisonous plague” can be definitely identified as demons’.¹¹³ Further he thinks that the poet possibly uses the idea of the ‘Seven Evil Spirits’ from Mesopotamian and later Semitic magical texts. In Ps 91:6 Gaster argues that the ‘qeteb who destroys midday’ is ‘sunstroke, the demon of the torrid noonday heat in which only “mad dogs and Englishmen” venture abroad.’ In his support he cites references by Theocritus, Pliny the Elder, Medieval Greek, Italian, German as well as Eastern European folk belief, and legends.¹¹⁴ Similarly to Caquot, Gaster does not explain why he regards qeteb or reshef as ‘demons’. His supporting evidence comes from a later time-frame.

Tromp, who has already been referred to, argues that qeteb, along with deber, is one of Death’s ‘demon’ associates.¹¹⁵

Wyatt asserts that ‘the term has overtones of a divine name.’¹¹⁶ Looking at Deut 32 which presents ‘the most useful information’, Wyatt argues that the passage contains ‘a triad of demonic figures, all associated with death’. Behind these ‘demons’ Wyatt sees three divinities, Mot, taking Hunger to be an epithet of this god, Reshef, the well-known Semitic deity, and on the basis of its association with these two, ‘Qeteb appears to be a divine name’ too. Thus for Wyatt ‘there is no compelling reason not to accept the clearly mythological sense of this passage [...]’. Further he argues that ¹¹¹ ‘Quelques’, p. 67.

¹¹² Pp. 67-68. See more on this below, 2.5.1.1.

¹¹³ Myth, p. 321.

¹¹⁴ Myth, p. 770.

¹¹⁵ See above, pp. 33-34.

¹¹⁶ ‘Qeteb’, in DDD, p. 673.

J. Blair 2. History of research

it is quite plausible, since both Mot and Reshef were at one point identified with Nergal, to suggest such identification for Qeteb too.¹¹⁷

In Ps 91:6 Wyatt equates deber with the Terror, the Arrow (of Reshef) with qeteb, which then is ‘the destruction the god wreaks’. Alternatively, he suggests Terror = Destruction and Arrow = Deber.¹¹⁸ In Hos 13:14 he takes both deber and qeteb as ‘the agents of Death’s purposes’. Finally, in Isa 28:2, similarly to Deut 32, Wyatt argues that a number of words should be interpreted mythologically, e.g. Bārād, Mayim. Qeteb seems to be operating through the tempest, and its intended ambiguity is suggested by śa‘ar, which according to Wyatt points to śā‘îr (satyr). In the ‘tempest metaphor’ he sees the combined figures of the ‘overwhelming flood-waters’ and the ‘dart-like effects of hail and heavy rain’, this latter reminiscent of ‘the arrows of the plague-god’. Ultimately both are seen by Wyatt as ‘metaphors for Death and its powers’.¹¹⁹ He concludes that the four biblical passages ‘are allusive rather than strictly informative, but suggest that Qeteb is more than a literary figure, living as a spiritual, and highly dangerous, reality in the minds of poets and readers’.

Wyatt’s assessment of qeteb relies on ancient Near Eastern parallels; his bibliography consists of works from authors who are proponents of the ‘demonological’ interpretation.

2.5.1 Qeteb in the ancient Near East and post-biblical Judaism

One of the reasons for taking qeteb as a ‘demon’ is the argument that the term is a remnant of Mesopotamian or Canaanite religion, the other is that it became the name of a demon in Jewish tradition. We shall now consider these points.

2.5.1.1 Assyria

Ancient Near Eastern evidence regarding qeteb is very scant. Caquot refers to a fragment of a treaty between Esarhaddon and Baal, the king of Tyre in around 680 BCE. As was common in the ancient Near East, the treaty ends with a list of deities that are appealed to as witnesses; they are charged with the cursing of the ¹¹⁷ ‘Qeteb’, p. 673.

¹¹⁸ ‘Qeteb’, p. 674.

¹¹⁹ ‘Qeteb’, p. 674.

J. Blair 2. History of research transgressors of the treaty. The list primarily contains the Assyrian gods, and it contains the phrase:

ba-a-ti ilâni (MEŠ) (d) qa-ti-ba ... ina qâta (II)

nêši a-ki-li [...] ku-nu, which Caquot translates as ‘That the gods Bethel and Qatiba [make you fall] into the paws of a devouring lion.’

This line follows the invocation of the great gods of sky and earth, the gods of Assyria, Akkad and the Western Semitic Near East (‘Transeuphrates’), invoked globally, and after that a series of Tyrian gods. Caquot is only guessing with regard to the nationality of the gods Bethel and Qatiba. He thinks that they probably belong to the gods of Esarhaddon because they come before the collective call of ‘the gods of Assyria and Akkad’. He argues that Bethel is a western deity, and Qatiba is not a Mesopotamian god. They follow the Seven, who often finish the listing of Assyrian deities. The most probable thing is to regard them as Western Semitic deities. The only certain thing is that they are not gods of Tyre.¹²⁰

Wyatt refers to R. Dussaud who also mentions this deity but only in relation to Bethel as ‘entité incertaine’. He argues that the reference is possibly a misreading of the line anyway.¹²¹ De Moor states, though he does not support his statement, that such a deity does not exist.¹²²

2.5.1.2 Ugarit

There is possibly a single reference in the Ugaritic texts in KTU 1.5 ii 24 to a qzb, which according to De Moor is a demon that he translates as ‘Sting’.¹²³ In the Dictionary of the Ugaritic Language the word qzb is listed as a divine name or possibly the name of a demon, the assumption being based on the definition of Hebrew קטב in HALOT (which in itself is uncertain), and the articles by De Moor¹²⁴

¹²⁰ Caquot, ‘Quelques’, p. 68.

¹²¹ DINGIR-a Qa-ti-ba x⁰ – [xxx] instead of ^dA-na-ti Ba-a⁰[-a-ti DINGIR]. MEŠ. See Wyatt, ‘Qeteb’, p. 673.

¹²² ‘A goddess Qatiba, mentioned by A. Caquot, Semitica 6 (1956) 67f. and H. Vorlander, Mein Gott (AOAT, 23; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1975) 263, does not exist.’ See: ‘O Death Where Is Thy Sting?’, in Ascribe to the Lord: Biblical and other studies in memory of P. C. Craigie, ed. by L. Eslinger and G. Taylor, JSOT Supp. 67 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1988), pp. 99-107, esp. p. 105, n. 15.

¹²³ De Moor, ARTU, p. 73 n. 343.

¹²⁴ Note 122 and 123 above.

J. Blair 2. History of research and Wyatt¹²⁵. De Moor defines qzb as a demon because it is ‘an evil demon according to Deut 32:24, Ps 91:6 and especially Hos 13:14.’¹²⁶ Wyatt points out that the end of the text of KTU 1.5 ii is broken; he does not translate from l. 23 onward.¹²⁷ One broken reference cannot be used as evidence to argue for the existence of a demon qzb in Ugarit which would then be used in support of the ‘demon’ resurfacing in the Hebrew Bible. The argument is a circular one. Ugaritic scholars (like De Moor) argue for qzb being a demon based on the presupposition that qeteb is a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible; biblical scholars in turn use the ‘Ugaritic evidence’ to support their claim that qeteb in the Hebrew Bible is a ‘demon’.¹²⁸

From the discussion above it is clear that at present there is no ancient Near Eastern evidence that points to the existence of a deity or demon qtb/ qzb.

2.5.1.3 Post-biblical Judaism

Proponents of the ‘demonological’ interpretation for qeteb often refer to Jewish tradition. Thus seemingly the Targums paraphrased Deut 32:24, so Targum Onqelos translated qeteb as ‘evil spirits’,¹²⁹ and the Palestinian Targums likewise.¹³⁰

A description of qeteb meriri can be found in the Babylonian Talmud which knows of two *qeteb*s, one before noon and one of the afternoon.¹³¹ Qeteb meriri ‘looks like a ladle turning in the jug of kamka’, and along with the other qeteb (yashud zaharaim, ‘destruction that wasteth at noonday’, a ref. to Ps 91:6) they operate ‘from the first of Tammuz until the sixteenth’.¹³² A rather different description of this demon can be ¹²⁵ ‘Qeteb’, pp. 673-674.

¹²⁶ See n. 123 above.

¹²⁷ RTU, pp. 119-120.

¹²⁸ The argument goes something like this: ‘qeteb is a demon in the HB because there is a demon, qzb in Ugarit, which we know is a demon because qeteb is a demon in the HB’.

¹²⁹ See above n. 107, p. 38. Also qeteb in M. Jastrow, A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic Literature (Peabody: Hendrickson, 2005), p. 1346.

¹³⁰ A. Diez Macho, Neophyti I. Targum Palestinense MS de la Biblioteca Vaticana (Madrid: CSIC, 1978), V, pp. 275 and 563.

¹³¹ bPesahim 111b, in I. Epstein, ed. The Babylonian Talmud: Seder Mo‘ed (London: Soncino Press, 1938), pp. 573-574.

¹³² As in n. 131.

J. Blair 2. History of research found in the Midrash on Psalms.¹³³ According to this it is ‘covered with scale upon scale and with shaggy hair, and he glares with his one eye, and that eye is in the middle of his heart.’ Not only the description but the time of its operation is also different in this account. It is powerful ‘from the seventeenth day in Tammuz to the ninth day in Ab’.¹³⁴ De Moor argues that the one similarity of the two descriptions which connects the demon to hot weather is significant.¹³⁵

De Moor also refers to a Hebrew-Aramaic amulet which contains a qtb nrqy.¹³⁶ He suggests translating it ‘the qtb that has been charmed’.¹³⁷ Naveh and Shaked, however, leave the line (26) untranslated, and are careful to point out that the whole text of the amulet is obscure; their translation is given with ‘great reservation’.¹³⁸ However, the amulet dates to late antiquity so even if qtb nrqy is a demon then this probably goes back to a Talmudic reference but cannot be taken to reflect on the Old Testament.

2.5.2 Summary qeteb

From the above we can see that the general scholarly view is that qeteb is the name of a demon in all of its four occurrences in the Hebrew Bible. The term’s association with reshaf (Deut 32:24) and deber (Ps 91:5-6, Hos 13:14), also with mot and sheol (Hos 13:14), and later Jewish tradition which knew of a demon qeteb are most commonly cited in support of this view (Oesterly and Robinson, Langton, Caquot, Gaster, Tromp and De Moor). Ancient Near Eastern parallels (Caquot, Gaster, Wyatt, De Moor) and the interpretation of the term by the ancient versions (Oesterly and Robinson, Caquot) are also referred to. Because of its association with deber, a ¹³³ The Midrash on Psalms, trans. by W. G. Braude, 2 vols (New Haven: Yale, 1959), II, pp.102 -107.

¹³⁴ This corresponds with the time of activity of demons according to Jewish legend. When going to Mt Sinai, Moses had to pray regularly for protection against demons. With the erection of the Tabernacle, however, they vanished, but not entirely. They could still exercise their power ‘within the period from the seventeenth day of Tammuz to the ninth day of Ab’. It is also said that the most dangerous demon was ‘Keteb, the sight of whom kills men as well as animals.’ This demon ‘rolls like a ball’; a similar feature found in the Midrash on Psalms, and it is described as having ‘the head of a calf with a single horn on his forehead’. See L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, transl. by P. Radin, 7 vols (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1911), III, p. 186.

¹³⁵ ‘O Death’, p. 102.

¹³⁶ Found in J. Naveh and S. Shaked, Amulets and Magic Bowls: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity (Jerusalem: The Magnes Press, 1985), pp. 55-61.

¹³⁷ ‘O Death’, p. 101.

¹³⁸ Amulets, p. 58.

J. Blair 2. History of research similar meaning is sought for qeteb too; thus most scholars translate it as 'plague/pestilence', 'sting', or 'scourge'.¹³⁹

To conclude: scholars usually interpret qeteb in the light of its occurrence with reshef, deber, mot and sheol, turning to ancient Near Eastern parallels and later Jewish tradition.

2.6 History of research on reshef

Reshef was a popular West Semitic deity, attested from the 3rd millennium BCE to the end of the 1st century BCE. His name occurs in Ugaritic, Phoenician, Aramaic,¹⁴⁰ Hebrew,¹⁴¹ Akkadian, Eblaite¹⁴² and Egyptian.¹⁴³ He was worshipped in Syria, Palestine and Egypt. There are various suggestions as to the etymology of the name but there is nothing conclusive.¹⁴⁴ Xella rightly notes that 'all the proposed etymologies are based on what we actually know about the character of this god; therefore, there is a serious risk of circular argument' (p. 701).

We shall consider the deity in its Semitic context before looking at its interpretation in the Hebrew Bible.

2.6.1 Ebla

From the evidence available to us he seems to have been a popular deity; a large part of the city was dedicated to him with a gate named after him.¹⁴⁵ He appears to be a ¹³⁹ The basic meaning of the term is 'pruning' from which other meanings such as 'epidemic', 'disaster' and 'sting' have been derived (HALOT, p. 1092). 'Destruction' is the most commonly given meaning by modern Bible translations. Thus for example CJB in Hos 13:14 and Isa 28:2; JPS in all occurrences; NAU in Ps 91:6; Deut 32:24 and Isa 28:2; NIV in Hos 13:14 and Isa 28:2; NJB in Isa 28:2; RSV in Hos 13:14, Deut 32:24 and Isa 28:2. This is the basic meaning given by BDB, p. 881, too.

¹⁴⁰ As ršp.

¹⁴¹ רשף occurs 7x in the Hebrew Bible, in 1 Chron 7:25; Deut 32:24; Ps 78:48; Hab 3:5; Ps 76: 4; Job 5:7; and Cant 8:6 (see ch. 7). It also occurs in Sir 43:17, and in 11 Q11 V: 4-13.

¹⁴² As ra-sa-ap.

¹⁴³ As r-š-p(w) cf. Xella, 'Resheph', DDD, pp. 700-703 (p.701). W. K. Simpson following Grdseloff, vocalizes it eršōp. See 'New Light on the God Reshef, Brief Communications', JAOS 73, no. 2 (1953), 86-89, esp. p. 86 n.1, and 'Reshep in Egypt', Orientalia 29 (1960), 63-74, esp. p. 70/2.

¹⁴⁴ See summary in Xella, p. 701. HALOT compares the personal name to Sam רשף, 'to inflame' (p. 1297).

¹⁴⁵ L. K. Handy, 'Resheph', in ABD, V, p. 678.

J. Blair 2. History of research

god of the royal necropolis, and also appears as ^drašap gunum, ‘Reshef of the garden’.¹⁴⁶ His priests had been attested here and he appeared as a theophoric element in names from Ur III, Mari, Terqa, Hana.¹⁴⁷ It is possible that he was a chthonic god, and we know that he had a consort called Adamma.¹⁴⁸

Niehr argues that the available documents show clearly that in 3rd millennium BCE Ebla Reshef was an underworld and a protector deity, and even though he agrees with Xella in that perhaps ‘he was more feared than venerated’, he emphasises that the evidence shows that he did not have a clearly negative connotation.¹⁴⁹

2.6.2 Egypt

The most detailed work collecting the Egyptian evidence on Reshef to date is W. J. Fulco’s book.¹⁵⁰ His epithets indicate that he was quite popular; however, they only present limited data about his character. He was called: ‘great god’; ‘lord of the sky’; ‘chief of the ennead of gods’; ‘he who hearkens to prayer’.¹⁵¹ It seems that he became popular from the New Kingdom period, probably under the influence of Asiatic immigrants.¹⁵²

His iconography represents an aggressive, warrior god;¹⁵³ this is why he was associated with Seth in Egypt,¹⁵⁴ and it was in this aspect that Amenhotep II

¹⁴⁶ Niehr, p. 85.

¹⁴⁷ Xella, p. 701; Niehr, p. 85 also n. 7.

¹⁴⁸ Xella, p. 701; Niehr, p. 85.

¹⁴⁹ He received offerings, his name appears as a theophoric element, a gate was named after him (Niehr, pp. 85-86).

¹⁵⁰ The Canaanite God Rešep, American Oriental Series (New Haven: American Oriental Society, 1976). See especially ch. I: ‘Egyptian Evidence’, pp. 1-32. He lists all the relevant literature in the footnotes. See also Caquot, ‘Quelques’, pp. 54-55; D. Conrad, ‘Der Gott Reschef’, ZAW 83 (1971), 157-183, (pp. 166-168); Niehr, pp. 89-91. For the iconography see I. Cornelius, The Iconography of the Canaanite Gods Reshef and Ba‘al. Late Bronze and Iron Age I Periods (1500-1000 BCE), OBO 140 (Freibourg: University Press, 1994); ‘The Iconography of the Canaanite Gods Reshef and Baal: A Rejoinder’, JNWSL 24 (1998), 167-177.

¹⁵¹ Simpson, ‘New light’, p. 86 n.2; Fulco, p. 27.

¹⁵² B. Grdseloff showed that his cult was first attested during the 18th dynasty (Simpson, ‘New light’, p. 86 cf. B. Grdseloff, Les débuts du culte du Reshef en Égypte, Cairo, 1942) and this is what most scholars (e.g. Simpson, ‘Reshep in Egypt’, pp. 65-66; Fulco, p. 30-32; Handy, p.678; Xella, pp. 700-701) follow. Before that time his presence is only attested in one foreign personal name. (Simpson, ‘New light’, pp. 86-7; ‘Reshep in Egypt’, p. 66 and n.3; Fulco, p. 30)

¹⁵³ According to Xella, Reshef’s iconography confirms his double (benevolent and dangerous) character. It is not clear what this is based on as he does not support his statement with any evidence.

J. Blair 2. History of research officially adopted the god as his protector in military campaigns. There is textual and literary evidence that during the Ramesside period (19th and 20th dyn.) he was venerated among the high ranks of society and the common people alike.¹⁵⁵ Nevertheless, despite his popularity with the Ramessides Reshef was not assimilated into the Egyptian pantheon, he remained a foreign god, ‘a resident alien’.¹⁵⁶

2.6.3 Ugarit

Reshef appears as a theophoric element in a large number of names at Ugarit¹⁵⁷ yet very little about him can be gleaned from the mythological and epic texts. He appears twice in the Keret narrative:¹⁵⁸ in KTU 1.14 i 18-19 as the cause of the death of the king’s fifth son, and in KTU 1.15 ii 6 as a guest at the banquet held by Keret for the gods. There is not much information we can gather from this narrative, only that Reshef was in some way associated with death, and that in spite of causing the death of the king’s children, he was important enough to be invited to the banquet along with the assembly of the gods. We also learn that he had the title zbl, ‘prince’.

However, considering the cultic and ritual texts we get a fuller picture as Reshef seems to have played a more important role in these.¹⁵⁹ He was mentioned in all ¹⁵⁴ Conrad, pp. 166-167; Niehr, p. 90.

¹⁵⁵ There is no evidence that during Amenhotep II’s reign Reshef’s cult would have reached the common people. After his reign occurrences of Reshef became scarcer until the Ramesside period when he became more popular and his cult spread. It must be noted however, that his worshippers were mostly Syrians living/working in Egypt. (Simpson, ‘Reshep in Egypt’, p. 66/2; 71; Xella, p. 701; Fulco, pp. 31-32; Niehr, p. 90).

¹⁵⁶ Handy, p. 678; Fulco, p.66; Simpson, ‘Reshep in Egypt’, p. 73. There is evidence that Reshef was attested in the Ptolemaic and later times (Simpson, ‘Reshep in Egypt’, p. 69/8; Fulco, p. 32).

¹⁵⁷ Fulco, pp. 34-36 and notes for references.

¹⁵⁸ Cf. S. B. Parker, The Pre-Biblical Narrative Tradition, Essays on the Ugaritic Poems Keret and Aqhat, SBL 24 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1989), pp. 145-216; Ugaritic Narrative Poetry, SBL Writings from the Ancient World 9 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1997), pp. 9- 48; Wyatt, RTU, pp. 176-243; G. del Olmo Lete, Mytos y legendas de Canaan, Fuentes de la Ciencia Binlica 1, (Madrid: Cristiandad, 1981); J.C. de Moor and K. Spronk, ‘Problematic Passages in the Legend of Kirtu (I)’, UF 14 (1982), 153-171; and ‘Problematic Passages in the Legend of Kirtu (II)’, UF 14 (1982), 173-190; D. Pardee, ‘Incantations and Rituals’, in The Context of Scripture: Canonical Compositions from the Biblical World, gen. ed. W. H. Hallo, 2 vols (Leiden: Brill, 1997), I, pp. 333-343. For more references see e.g. Wyatt, RTU, ‘Select bibliography’, p. 176; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion According to the Liturgical Texts of Ugarit, trans. by W. G. E. Watson (Bethesda: CDL Press, 1999), p. 325 n. 1.

¹⁵⁹ Del Olmo’s statistics show that ršp is the 4th of 17 deities whom he calls ‘the principal gods of the cultic-sacrificial pantheon of Ugarit, those receiving the most offerings’ (Canaanite Religion, p. 71). Pardee notes that Reshef is part of the list of 31 divinities who are beneficiaries of offerings and figure in mythological texts as well as one of 28 who receive offerings and figure as theophoric elements in anthroponyms (Les Textes Rituels, Ras Shamra-Ougarit 12, 2 vols (Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les

J. Blair 2. History of research

three categories of ritual texts,¹⁶⁰ thus he appears as a patron god of the dynasty (KTU 1.105; 1.106); in texts belonging to the category of prayer and magic (KTU 1.78; 1.123; 1.100); and in sacrificial ritual texts (KTU 1.41; 1.87; 1.39). Reshef appears in 17 ritual texts,¹⁶¹ as *ršpm*¹⁶² in another one, and as a composite¹⁶³ in a further 5 texts. He appears in the ‘canonical’ deity lists in Ugarit.¹⁶⁴

A detailed analysis of the cultic-ritual texts leads to the following conclusion: Reshef was a chthonic deity associated with plague and disease. He seems to have played an important role in the royal and funerary cult. Perhaps his status as a dynastic god was due to his association with war, and as such he was a patron god of the kings. He received the šrp and šlmm sacrifices, but whether this was linked to his ‘infernal character’ or not is questionable.¹⁶⁵ civilisations, 2000), p. 910). See also J. C. de Moor, ‘The Semitic Pantheon of Ugarit’, UF 2 (1970), 187-228, esp. p. 217.

In some texts Reshef appears with Anat; some scholars think this more significant than others. Thus while Fulco writes that Reshef is ‘frequently listed together stereotypically with Anat in various texts that involve groupings of gods’,¹⁶⁶ Pardee points out that in fact there are only a handful of instances where they occur together, and even then this is because they both represent the so-called ‘third rank’ of the Ugaritic pantheon, i.e. the gods who do not belong to El’s immediate family circle.¹⁶⁷

¹⁶⁰ See del Olmo’s division of ritual texts in three categories. According to this we can speak of 1) a pantheon of the palace or patron gods of the dynasty (pp. 58-62); 2) a pantheon of prayer and magic (pp. 36-66); and 3) a pantheon of the sacrificial rituals (pp. 6-71). Reshef is mentioned in texts belonging to all of these categories.

¹⁶¹ KTU 1.39; 1.41; 1.47; 1.78; 1.79; 1.81; 1.87; 1.90; 1.102; 1.103 (+ 1.145); 1.109; 1.118; 1.123; 1.126; 1.148 and 1.168. See Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 988, Appendice 1B.

¹⁶² KTU 1.91.

¹⁶³ ršp idrp in KTU 1.148; ršp bbt in KTU 1.105 and 1.171; ršp gn in KTU 6.62 and 1.165; ršp hgb in KTU 1.90; 1.106; 1.134 and 1.168; ršp mhbn in KTU 1.105 and 1.106; ršp mlk in KTU 1.105 and ršp sb’i in KTU 1.91.

¹⁶⁴ Of this we have two separate copies, KTU 1.118 and 1.47. It is of great importance that an Akkadian copy (RS 20.24) of it also exists because this allows us to relate the Ugaritic names/epithets to their Mesopotamian equivalent. See del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 71-72; Pardee, Ritual and Cult at Ugarit, SBL Writings from the Ancient World 10 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 2002), pp. 12-13. Del Olmo points out that the value of the Akkadian copy lies in the fact that ‘It allows us to determine the “personality”, “function”, and “attributes” of the Ugaritic gods from their Mesopotamian equivalents, which are better known to us.’ (Canaanite Religion, p. 72).

¹⁶⁵ See discussion in Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 41-50.

¹⁶⁶ Fulco, p.40.

¹⁶⁷ Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 52-53.

J. Blair 2. History of research

Their common trait is perhaps their association with war.

In the ritual texts Reshef appears in various manifestations, these forms might be his epithets and some might refer to his cult centres. He also appears in plural form, as ršpm, and this perhaps reflects his multiple manifestations.

One of the most valuable sources of information is RS 20.024, the Akkadian translation of the deity list which identifies Reshef with Nergal.¹⁶⁸ This is where we can gather the most information regarding the god's character, and which confirms his association with the underworld, epidemics and war. All these characteristics can give him both a positive and a negative aspect: he can be both the cause of illness and invoked to protect against; he can cause destruction as a war god as well as be the protector of his worshippers; he can be the god of the underworld but play an important role as such in the royal funerary cult. The large number of personal names containing his name as a theophoric element would tilt the balance towards the positive aspect. In any case there is nothing in Ugarit that would suggest a demonic character to Reshef.¹⁶⁹

2.6.4 Phoenician and Aramaic evidence

Reshef occurs in several inscriptions in various contexts and locations. These have been discussed by Conrad (pp. 164-165; 174-178), Fulco (pp. 44-55) and Niehr (pp. 91-95). They agree in that Reshef seems to have enjoyed a relatively high status in ¹⁶⁸ Nergal was the king of the underworld in Sumerian religion and retained this role in Babylonian and Assyrian religion too. In a Sumerian inscription on the statue of king Kurigalzu, Nergal appears as the husband of Ninisinna and as the king of the underworld. See ANET, pp. 58-59. In A Vision of the Nether World of the Assyrian prince Kamma Nergal is described as 'valiant', 'all powerful', and 'the almighty, who vanquishes the evil ones', at whose 'wrathful brilliance' the prince trembled (ANET, pp. 109-110). Nergal's other main aspect was god of war but he was also regarded as the god of forest fires, fevers and plagues perhaps due to his identification with Erra from the first millennium who was a violent god of similar character. See T. Jacobsen, The Treasures of Darkness. A History of Mesopotamian Religion (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1976), p. 227; Black and Green, pp. 135-136. Nergal also had a positive side. He acted as a personal god (Jacobsen, Treasures, pp. 155-157) as well as patron god (in his warrior god aspect) to Assyrian kings. In the Epilogue to the Code of Hammurabi we read of Nergal: 'the strong one among the gods', 'the fighter without peer, who achieves victory for me', he burns 'the people of the enemy in his great power like the raging fire of swamp-reeds' (ANET, p. 180). Nergal is often mentioned as one of the deities who gives oracles (ANET, pp. 298-300), and as one who is invoked in treaties (ANET, pp. 533, 534, 538, 659). Nergal's fierceness thus aids those whom he protects, similar to Reshef's role in Egypt. For other studies on the relationship of Reshef and Nergal see also Conrad, pp. 158-164 and references given there. It is also worth noting that later (Hellenistic times) Nergal was identified with the Greek god Herakles, and thus the fact that Reshef too was associated with Herakles, was not surprising (Fulco, pp. 38-40).

¹⁶⁹ So also Niehr, pp. 88-89.

J. Blair 2. History of research

some of these cultures (e.g. in the pantheon of Zinjirli, at Karatepe), where he appears in a positive role (e.g. Karatepe). His war-like character is evident especially in Cyprus where he was identified with Apollo, the Greek archer god, and where he appears as ršp-hš which is best understood as ‘Reshef of the arrow’.¹⁷⁰

2.6.5 The interpretation of reshef

Because Reshef was a well-known deity the occurrence of the term in the Hebrew Bible is taken without question to be a reference to this god. Since foreign deities were ‘demonised’ in the Hebrew Bible, most scholars argue that reshef appears as a ‘demon’ there.

Interestingly neither Oesterley and Robinson nor Langton treat reshef in their discussion of ‘OT demonology’. For others the occurrence of this term in several passages in the Hebrew Bible together with deber and qeteb is the main reason to argue that these latter two are references to ‘demons’.

Caquot argues that even though the ancient versions allowed all traces of the proper name, Reshef, to be lost (and modern translations likewise), it is possible to reconstruct the ancient divinity by ‘discovering’ its name elsewhere in the ancient Semitic world (p. 56). In the Hebrew Bible, Caquot argues, Reshef is easily recognized as a divine name in Habakkuk 3:5. The context is clearly mythological, thus for Caquot it is natural that both Reshef and Deber (appearing in parallel) represent divine names, two lesser divinities accompanying Yahweh. Based on other occurrences of deber where presumably it refers to plague/pestilence, Caquot is led to regard both reshef and deber here as ‘more or less personified symbols of (Yahweh’s) awesome power’ (p.57). Even though this interpretation would be supported by the ancient versions, Caquot prefers to take Reshef as a secondary deity or ‘demon’, the two terms seemingly equated by him. ‘Il apparaît donc nettement que, dans ce texte, rešep désigne bien une divinité secondaire, un démon subordonné à Eloah.’ He then conjectures that perhaps the Greek translators considered the text unintelligible or ‘embarrassing’, which is why they chose to demythologise the text by removing the name of Reshef. He believes that the Vulgate was more correct in its interpretation by using the word diabolus. Recognizing in the term reshef the name of the god emphasises the mythological colour of the text, concludes Caquot (p. 58).

¹⁷⁰ Fulco, pp. 49-51. Niehr argues that the similar character of the two gods (as gods of the bow as well as sickness and wellbeing) must have been responsible for their identification (p. 93).

J. Blair 2. History of research

He argues similarly in Deuteronomy 32, where ‘l’allusion à Reshep ... ne paraît pas moins nette’ (p. 58). However, while raab can only be translated as a common noun, both Reshef and Qeteb Meriri ‘sont des démons appelés par leur nom’. The fact that all the versions (LXX, Aquila, Targ Onqelos and Vg) render the term by ‘bird’, only proves to Caquot that the versions must have had the image of a winged ‘demon’ in mind, and that ‘ce n’est pas la personification d’un fléau naturel, mais l’être supérieur qui en est responsable représenté ici sous une forme animale qu’il a pu prendre dans l’imagination populaire’ (p. 59).

In Job 5:7 the ‘sons of reshef’ are identified as birds. However, Caquot argues that if the image of winged ‘demons’ inhabiting the space between heaven and earth would be recognized behind this term, the Masoretic text would make more sense. The expression might have been an ancient proverbial one that was still familiar to the redactor of Job but no longer so to the ancient translators, hence the translation of ‘birds’ (p. 60). He further argues that the association of reshef with birds cannot be by accident, but that this is in fact compatible with the representation of him as a winged being (p. 61).

In Psalm 78:48 Caquot argues that barad should be changed to deber and thus restore the pair Deber and Reshef as in Habakkuk 3:5. The fact the reshef appears in the plural here leads Caquot to suggest translating the term generally as ‘demons’. He finds the ancient versions’ rendering the term as ‘fire’ surprising, but using the targum’s (of psalms) translation (which is a gloss), ‘the reshefs of fire’, he suggests ‘les démons ainsi désignés sont des êtres de feu’ (p. 62). In Canticles 8:6, however, Caquot asserts that it is the meaning of ‘fire’ or ‘flames’ that should be given to reshafim, as it would be difficult to translate a proper name here (p. 63). In Psalm 76:4 the usual rendering is that of ‘the flames of the bow’ in the sense of ‘arrows’ but Caquot prefers the translation ‘les traits de l’arc’, as the image here is more that of lighting bolts than flames (p. 62). He asserts that in both passages the ancient versions are rather vague.

Caquot concludes that it appears from the biblical passages that at least two concrete images have been attached to the term reshef, that of the bird and that of the fire. Thanks to the biblical passages, ancient versions and Jewish heritage, Caquot finds it possible to rediscover the characteristics of the ‘demon’ Reshef, which were probably inherited from the ancient deity. Combining all the evidence he argues that it is possible to draw the image of a ‘being that inhabits the atmosphere, it is winged, igneous and invested with harmful powers, this latter characteristic is attributable to his degradation'. Further, it is the image of thunder and lightning that would have been the unique image of Reshef to an ancient Israelite.

J. Blair 2. History of research

Caquot seems to contradict himself when on the one hand he asserts that 'Reshef is only a simple name in the Hebrew Bible of which the ancient versions made an appellative' (p. 53), but on the other hand argues that the Old Testament passages allow us to detect under the name the ancient divinity of atmosphere, master of thunder (similar to Hadad or Baal) and rain, dispenser of fertility, a great god (p. 64). It is curious as to where he obtains these characteristics of Reshef when he says that 'in the ancient documents Reshef is only a name' (p.65). There is also no reason given why he regards Reshef as a 'demon' while still referring to him as a great or secondary deity. The attribution of malevolence to him in the Hebrew Bible is not supported by the texts there.

T. Gaster argues that Reshef, the 'Canaanite god of plague', appears in the mythological passage of Hab 3:5 whose arrows are 'the faery darts of disease and disaster' (Myth, p. 670). Elsewhere in the Hebrew Bible his name is used by metonymy to 'denote various forms of affliction'. Thus he asserts that in Ps 76:3 the arrows are described as 'reshef's of the bow', which denotes 'satanic shafts'. While in Canticles 8:6 the 'fiery arrows' refer to the 'pangs of love', in Job 5:7 the 'sons of reshef' 'is a generic term for demons who hover in the air, in contrast to the "trouble" which seems to sprout out of the very earth' (p. 671). In Deut 32:24 reshef appears as one of 'seven evils'. Here the 'monstrous Reshef' along with qeteb 'can be definitely identified as demons' according to Gaster (p. 321). He does not discuss Psalm 78.

Tromp, similarly to Gaster, emphasises Reshef's association with the underworld especially as his focus is on Death. He argues that the Reshef in Deut 32:24 is the personal name for the Semitic deity appearing here with 'personal traits'. However, the verse also shows that Resheph 'must be leading a reduced existence: he is overshadowed by Yahweh.' Not surprisingly Tromp takes ra'ab in Deut 32:24 to be a reference to Death, as he argues that 'Death sometimes appears in biblical texts under the guise of Hunger or the Hungry One.'¹⁷¹ Since Reshef appears here with personal traits, so must ra'ab. Tromp is correct in recognising the personification of ra'ab and reshef in this passage, even if his identification of the former with Death is questionable. However, as we have seen earlier, Tromp goes further and suggests ¹⁷¹ Tromp, p. 107. This is also Wyatt's understanding of this passage. See above p. 39.

J. Blair 2. History of research that behind personification there might be a living (even if only folk) belief (pp. 160, 166). He quotes G. A. Barton who writes: ‘While but few individual demons can be traced in the canonical literature, the apocryphal writings bear witness to the fact that popular thought abounded with them.’¹⁷² Since in Mesopotamian religion illnesses were regarded as caused by demons, Tromp believes that the case was similar in Israel. Thus Reshef, whom he takes primarily to have been the god of plague and pestilence, must function as a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible.

A contrary view to this is that of Conrad who argues that Reshef's association with disease and underworld are secondary, and emphasises his character as a weather and war god (p. 183). As a weather god he brings rain and thus fertility but he is also terrible in the storm and tempest appearing with hail and lightning. As a war god he is also a protector of his own land and people who fights against their enemy. He strikes with sickness (as that is a natural consequence of war), and punishes the treaty breakers. Because of similar characteristics, especially his association with war, Conrad argues that he is identified with the Mesopotamian Nergal (pp. 158-164) and the Egyptian Seth (pp. 166-168). Conrad does not discuss reshef's occurrences in the Hebrew Bible.

Fulco strongly disagrees with the view that Reshef would have been a weather and fertility god. He maintains that as far as Reshef was a chthonic deity he was involved in general with ‘the forces of life and death’. However, to regard him as primarily a weather god is ‘a misunderstanding of the Old Testament passages’ in which the term reshef occurs.¹⁷³ In Deut 32:24 Fulco, following Caquot, translates both reshef and qeteb as proper names and considers them ‘demons’.¹⁷⁴ In Hab 3:5, also following Caquot (and Vattioni), he considers both Deber and Reshef as ‘mythological figures’ (p. 57), and in Job 5:7 he agrees with Caquot’s suggestion that the ‘sons of reshef’ should be regarded as winged ‘demons’. In accordance with this

¹⁷² P. 161 quoting G. A. Barton in J. Hastings, eds, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1911), IV, 598 B.

¹⁷³ P.71. He argues that the misunderstanding might be partly due to confusion between the ‘so-called Hadad-bronzes and the Rešep-bronzes’, and partly to some appearances of Reshef in passages associated with meteorological phenomena (e.g. Hab 3:5). However, these are very few and Reshef appears as a member of Yahweh’s escort in a theophany, which ‘typically involve(s) dramatic disturbances in the weather’ (p. 61).

¹⁷⁴ He also cites Late Hebrew tradition in support (p. 57 n. 305); e.g. M. Jastrow, p. 1502: ‘reshef means demons (of the hot season, v. qeteb)’ cf. Ber. 5^a (cf. Job 5:7).

J. Blair 2. History of research interpretation he sees Ps 91:5-6 as a parallel and accepts Dahood's suggestion that the passage 'clearly contains remnants of demonological terminology'. Thus 'it is hard to believe' that the רֶשֶׁף יְעִנֶה is 'not ultimately a reference to Rešep'.¹⁷⁵ Fulco sees another allusion to Reshef in Ps 78:48, accepting suggestions to change barad to deber thus gaining the reading Deber and Reshefs, who then are 'malevolent spirits accompanying God in his destructive wake'.¹⁷⁶ He argues that both Ps 76:4 and Cant 8:6 demythologised the original image of Reshef. Thus in the first passage the term is 'little more than "vicious assault(s) (associated with bow and arrows)"', and in the latter it is a common noun. However, Fulco argues that despite this fact the term's 'roots in mythology are unmistakable'; reshef is more than just a 'flame'. 'Love is something like a demon – it grows and takes hold of the lovers, eventually beyond their control' (p. 60). Fulco concludes that:

... all of the OT passages seem to suggest that Rešep represents some more-or-less uncontrolled cosmic force, typically as a bringer of plague and sudden death, or at least of a seizure beyond control. Like Dionysus in Greek mythology he is a mysterious and dark power, an – in the case of love - ineluctable passion. What we observe in the OT are various degrees of demythologization of this force; sometimes Rešep is a personal figure bringing destruction, sometimes he/it is little more than a metaphor. But even as a metaphor the diverse connotations, when pushed back to their mythological roots, are all quite consonant with the primitive notion of Rešep as a chthonic god, the lord of the underworld and therefore intimately involved with the powers of death, the minion of a superior deity when he appears with his host. (pp. 61-62)

P. Xella in complete agreement with Fulco holds the view that in the Hebrew Bible Reshef is 'a demonized version of an ancient Canaanite god', who is now submitted to Yahweh (pp.700-703). The level of demythologization varies. Sometimes he appears as a terrible and powerful cosmic force (Hab 3:5) and at others his name is only a metaphor (Ps 76:4 and Cant 8:6). Similarly to Tromp, Xella also recognizes the personification of some of the destructive forces sent by Yahweh. Thus in Deut 32:24, he regards both Qeteb and Reshef as ancient Canaanite gods who are perhaps 'conceived of as flying demons', and in Ps 78:48 Barad and Reshef are both 'decayed deities...depicted as malevolent spirits which accompany God in his ¹⁷⁵ Fulco, p. 59. This is also the view of Xella, p. 703.

¹⁷⁶ Fulco, p. 59. This was suggested also by Caquot, 'Quelques', p. 61.

J. Blair 2. History of research destructive action.’ He concludes, ‘At any rate it is possible to perceive aspects of the personality of an ancient chthonic god, which fits the image of Resheph found in the other Semitic cultures.’ (p. 703)

Day shares the views of Tromp, Fulco and Xella, and argues that Resheph’s association with plague, underworld, arrows and plurality are features that can be found in the Old Testament too.¹⁷⁷ But one wonders whether these characteristics are not imposed on the Old Testament occurrences. Day argues that in Hab 3:5 Yahweh appears accompanied by deber and reshef who are personifications of ‘Plague’ and ‘Pestilence’, and that they ‘form as it were angelic or perhaps rather demonic companions of Yahweh’. It is not clear, and Day does not explain, why it is the latter rather than the former. The same question arises in the case of Psalm 78. Day notes that in v. 49 we have a reference to Yahweh’s destroying angels, but he takes these to be an allusion to the reshafim, ‘the Resheph demons or “sons of Resheph” (Job 5:7) bringing pestilence’ (p. 201). It is not clear why these should be taken as ‘demons’, especially when the context is clear about their identity; they are Yahweh’s מְשַׁלְחֵת מַלְאָכָי רָעִים, ‘destroying angels (bringers) of evils’.¹⁷⁸

In Job 5:7 Day follows the interpretation of Gaster, Habel, Gordis, Pope and Clines and argues for a mythological allusion.¹⁷⁹ Thus the בְּנֵי־רִשְׁפָּי here are ‘the sons of [the underworld demon] Resheph’ who bring pestilence (p. 203).

Deut 32:24 might contain another allusion to ‘the mythological archer god Resheph’ on the basis of the reference to arrows in v. 23. However, Day is undecided whether the term here refers simply to an ‘impersonal plague’ or if there is a ‘demonic reference’. He seems inclined towards the latter.

Day agrees with Fulco in that in Cant 8:6 reshef is demythologised but still retains a mythological background, and that in Ps 76:4 ‘the god Resheph has been most clearly and totally demythologised’; the divine name simply refers to ‘human arrows of war’ (pp. 205-206).

Similarly to Fulco and Xella, Day also believes that Ps 91:5-6 contains a further allusion to Reshef,¹⁸⁰ and that in this passage he is ‘thought of as a plague demon’.¹⁸¹

¹⁷⁷ Gods and Goddesses, pp. 197-208 (esp. p. 199).

¹⁷⁸ See discussion of this Psalm in 5.5.10 and 7.4.

¹⁷⁹ For references see Day, Gods and Goddesses, p. 202 n. 46.

J. Blair 2. History of research

The most recent treatment of Reshef is the article by Niehr, in which he traces the career of the North-West Semitic deity, from Ebla, Ugarit, Egypt, Phoenicia and Syria to Palestine, to see how the transition from god to ‘demon’ took place.¹⁸²

Although he stresses the importance of an in-depth examination of all evidence, Niehr’s treatment is more like a sampling than a detailed analysis especially when it comes to the occurrences of Reshef in the Hebrew Bible. From his discussion of the ancient Near Eastern evidence¹⁸³ he concludes that the Northwest Semitic god Reshef was associated with the royal necropolis (Ebla, Ugarit), with the entrance into the underworld (Ugarit), as well as with epidemic and sickness (Ugarit), but also with the protection against disease (Ebla, Ugarit, Phoenicia). He also comes across as a war and protector deity (Ugarit, Egypt, Phoenicia, Samal). Niehr points out that the god does not appear as a demon in any of these cultures. His statement that the ‘demonization’ of Reshef first appears in the Old Testament (p. 95) is rather surprising, especially as no evidence is listed in support of this claim. Further he argues (p. 97),

Geht man auf die wenigen alttestamentlichen Angaben zu Rešep ein, so ist zunächst einmal deutlich, dass an keiner alttestamentlichen Stelle mehr ein Gott Rešep genannt wird, sondern Rešep, insofern er überhaupt ein eigenständiges Wesen darstellt, allenfalls als ein Dämon in den Blick kommt.

So then Niehr does not recognize Reshef as a deity even if a lesser one alongside Yahweh in Hab 3:5, but argues rather curiously that as in other cases when he is ‘the subject of a verb of motion’, here too, he comes across as a ‘demon’. Further he claims that Yahweh appears here in the classical representation of the war and protector god Reshef, a role that he has taken ¹⁸⁰ For more references to scholars who hold this view see Day, Gods and Goddesses, p. 206 n. 58 and p. 207 n. 59.

¹⁸¹ This is all conjectural. The ‘arrow’ is not necessarily an allusion to Reshef. We have seen elsewhere that Yahweh uses the expression ‘my arrows’ to refer to his agents of punishments in general (cf. Deut 32:23, 42; Job 6:4; see also Jer 50:14; 51:11; Ezek 5:16; 21:21; Ps 7:13) and that these agents are in many cases identified as his angels. Ps 91:10 supplies another example of this identification (v. 11). The evidence cited by Day (LXX and rabbinic interpretation) is weak. The Targum’s ‘the arrow of the death angel’ supports our, rather than a demonic, interpretation. See Day, Gods and Goddesses, p. 207.

¹⁸² See ch 1 n. 24, p. 7 for reference.

¹⁸³ Ebla, pp. 85-86; Ugarit, pp. 86-89; Egypt, pp. 89-91; Phoenicia, pp. 91-94; Aramaic Syria, pp. 94 - 95.

J. Blair 2. History of research over from Reshef, reducing the deity to a ‘noch auf eine unheilbringende Funktion im Umkreis JHWHS’ (p.97).

In Deut 32 and Ps 78, Niehr argues, Reshef appears to be threatening humans as well as livestock. That he appears in a plural form in Ps 78 is another sure sign for Niehr that points to Reshef's ‘demon’ status, although in these three texts he is still in a somewhat personalised form. Following Fulco, Day and others, Niehr also believes that while the depersonalisation of Reshef is more advanced in Job 5:7, Ps 76 and Cant 8:5, it finally culminates in Psalm 91, ‘Die völlige Entpersonalisierung und damnatio memoriae des ehemaligen Gottes Rešep erfolgt dann in Ps 91,5-6...’ (p. 98).

2.6.6 Summary reshef

From the discussion above we can see that reshef in the Hebrew Bible is taken by all scholars to be the name of Reshef, a god well known and worshipped throughout the ancient Near East. Reshef was associated with plague and the underworld and this is taken by some (e.g. Caquot, T. Gaster, Tromp, Day, Fulco and Xella) as pointing to a demonic character which in turn explains why he appears as a ‘demon’ in the Old Testament. However, the evidence from Ebla, Egypt, Ugarit, as well as Phoenician and Aramaic cultures suggests that the deity’s main characteristic was god of war, and his positive aspects ruled over the negative ones (e.g. Conrad, Niehr).

Scholars take the occurrence of reshef in Hab 3:5 (along with deber), in Deut 32:24 (with qeteb), the ‘sons of reshef’ in Job 5:7 the plural ‘reshefs’ in Ps 78: 48 as the appearance of ‘Canaanite Reshef’, now presented as a ‘demon’ by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. They also generally agree that in Ps 76: 4 and Cant 8:6 the term is completely demythologised.¹⁸⁴

To conclude: the general consensus regarding reshef in the Hebrew Bible is that the term is a reference to the West Semitic deity Reshef, known as a plague god in the ancient Near East, and as such it is either a ‘demon’ or appears demythologised in the texts.

¹⁸⁴ Except T. Gaster who sees the arrows in Ps 76:3 as ‘satanic shafts’, and Day, who in Cant 8:6 still sees a mythological background.

2.7 Conclusion of history of research of azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef

The present chapter has demonstrated that there is a consensus to regard the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef as names of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible. This interpretation is based on the view that these terms are ‘demons’ because they were either deities (azazel, deber, qeteb, reshef) or demons (azazel, lilith, qeteb) in the ancient Near East, and therefore appear ‘demonised’ in the Hebrew Bible, or they were known demons in later Jewish tradition (azazel, lilith, qeteb) and therefore must have been ‘demons’ already in the Old Testament, or both.

There is also an underlying assumption that the Hebrew Bible preserves the belief that ‘demons’ inhabit the desert, and this is also used in the case of azazel and lilith by some scholars as ‘proof’ to their ‘demonic’ nature.

We can conclude from the history of research that in the case of azazel it is questionable whether any of the arguments are strong enough to support the demonological interpretation. The reliability of etymological evidence in general has been questioned.¹⁸⁵ Similarly, the significance of ancient Near Eastern material to explain the meaning of the term azazel and the rite described in Lev 16 is debatable. The Enoch material should also be treated with caution.¹⁸⁶

With regard to lilith we saw that in the demoness Lilith attributes of the ancient lilitulardat lili demons as well as those of Lamaštu were fused and thanks to Jewish mysticism and 19th-20th century poets and painters she became the most popular demon ever. It can easily be understood that anyone familiar with Lilith’s name would inevitably think of the demoness as known since medieval times (which to the modern reader is also ancient). Therefore we argue that scholars interpreting Isa 34:14 who see Lilith appearing there are reading into the text influenced by their knowledge of the demoness, and are ignoring the context.

The problem with the argument that deber is a ‘demon’ is that it is generally based on a discussion of only three texts and the presupposition that reshef with whom it appears in two of these texts, and qeteb with whom it appears in one text, are also ¹⁸⁵ See above 2.2.1. The attempts to explain the etymology of azazel have failed to throw light on the origins, character or function of the term. Similarly in the case of reshef, proposed etymologies actually start from what is already known of the deity (See Xella, p. 701).

¹⁸⁶ See remarks on problems arising from a comparative approach in 1.2.1 n. 48, p. 12.

J. Blair 2. History of research

‘demons’. It also relies on evidence from the ancient Near East which is scant and questionable. The situation is similar with qeteb and reshef too, with the addition of citing later Jewish belief in the case of qeteb. The existence of a mythological figure, a deity or demon qtb from Assyria or Ugarit is questionable, and later Jewish belief which knew of a demon called Qeteb should be used with caution.¹⁸⁷

That reshef is a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible is based on the general consensus that it is the name of the known deity Reshef, and the view that foreign deities are demonised by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. That a deity called Reshef was well known in the ancient Near East is unquestionable but, as we have seen, his association with plague or disease is only one of his aspects. His major characteristic seems to be that of a god of war and protector of kings. Whether it is this deity that lies in the background of the reshef in the Hebrew Bible should be determined from the Hebrew texts.

To conclude: because of the many weaknesses in the interpretation of these terms that this chapter has shown, it becomes clear that there is a necessity to take a close look at the Hebrew texts.

¹⁸⁷ Rabbinical literature knows of a demon qeteb meriri. See W. H. Worrell, ‘The Demon of Noonday and Some Related Ideas’, JAOS 38 (1918), 160-166. See also 2.5.1.3. above.

CHAPTER 3: AZAZEL IN THE HEBREW BIBLE

3.1 Introduction

The term עֲזָאזֵל only occurs four times in three verses in the Hebrew Bible, in Leviticus 16, vv. 8, 10 (2x) and 26. Its precise meaning is unknown, which is why as we have seen (in 2.2) there are various interpretations since antiquity to the present day. The most common is to regard it as the name of a ‘demon’. The present chapter questions this view and aims to examine the term in its context, determining (if possible) what is its meaning and function, and whether a mythological figure can be discerned behind it.

3.2 Leviticus 16: 8, 10 and 26

v.8

וְנָתַן אֶהָרֵן עַל-שְׁנֵי הַשְּׁעִירִים גּוֹרְלוֹת גּוֹרֵל אֶחָד לַיהוָה וְגּוֹרֵל אֶחָד לְעֲזָאזֵל:

v.10

וְהַשְּׁעִיר אֲשֶׁר עָלָה עָלָיו הַגּוֹרֵל לְעֲזָאזֵל יַעֲמֵד-חַי לְפָנַי יְהוָה לְכַפֵּר עָלָיו לְשַׁלַּח אֹתוֹ לְעֲזָאזֵל הַמִּדְבָּרָה:

v.26

וְהַמְשַׁלַּח אֶת-הַשְּׁעִיר לְעֲזָאזֵל יִכְבֹּס בְּגָדָיו וְרַחֵץ אֶת-בְּשָׂרוֹ בַּמַּיִם וְאַחֲרֵי-כֵן יָבוֹא אֶל-הַמַּחֲנֶה:

And Aaron shall place on the two goats lots, one lot for Yahweh and the other lot for azazel.

And the goat upon which the lot for azazel went up shall be presented alive before Yahweh to atone over it from sending it away for azazel to the desert.

And the one who sent the goat away for azazel shall wash his garments and bathe his body in water and afterwards he shall enter the camp.

The chapter can be divided as follows:¹

¹ See also F. H. Gorman, The Ideology of Ritual: Space, Time and Status in the Priestly Theology JSOT Supp 91 (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1990), pp. 74-75; Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1059-1061; Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 224-225.

J. Blair 3. Azazel

1. Introduction (vv.1-2)
2. Preparations before the ritual
 - A. requirements of Aaron (vv. 3-4)
 - his offering v. 3
 - his clothing and ritual bathing v. 4
 - B. requirements from the community
 - offering v. 5
3. Presentation of sacrificial animals (vv. 6-10)
 - A. bull and ram for Aaron (v. 6)
 - B. two goats and ram for community (vv.7-8, 10)
4. The Ritual (vv. 11- 28)
 - A. חַטָּאת offering / כִּפָּר (vv. 11-22)
 - חַטָּאת bull for Aaron – vv. 6, 11-14 // כִּפָּר for Aaron and his house
 - חַטָּאת goat for people – vv. 9, 15-16a // כִּפָּר for the holy place
 - bull and goat – vv. 16b-19 // כִּפָּר for tent and outer altar
 - the goat for Azazel –vv. 10, 20-22 // כִּפָּר for people?
 - B. Burnt offerings (vv. 23-24)
 - C. Concluding actions (vv. 25-28)
5. Conclusion – extension of ritual into the future (vv. 29-34)

The introductory verses (vv. 1- 2) refer to the tragic death of Aaron's sons in chapter 10, and then are followed by instructions given to Aaron regarding the way he is to enter the holy of holies. He is not allowed to enter at any time but only once a year (the exact day is set in v. 29), and only after careful preparations.² This suggests that the cause of death of the sons of Aaron could have been entering at improper time or without adequate preparations.³ Aaron is told to take a young bull for a sin/purification offering (חַטָּאת)⁴ and a ram for a whole burnt offering (לֵעֹלָה)⁵ to expiate (כִּפֶּר) for him and his household. He is given specific instructions in v. 4 to wash and as to what to wear. It is interesting to note the prescribed clothing is a lot simpler than what the high-priest would normally wear (cf. Exod 28).⁷

² Hartley, Leviticus, p.234; Bellinger, p.99.

³ Gorman asserts that their sin might have been the 'confusion of categories', i.e. they brought fire from the 'outside' into 'the realm of the sacred' (p. 65). In any case they doubly polluted the sanctuary, first by entering, and second by their dead bodies. (Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1011-1012).

⁴ The root חטא commonly means 'sin, guilt' in religious contexts in the Semitic languages. Along with פשע and עון it is the most common word for 'sin' in the HB. The root with all its derivatives occurs 593x in the HB and has a broad range of meaning including a basic, non-theological meaning of 'miss/fail' (cf. Judg 20:16; Job 5:24; Prov 8: 36; 19:2). In social and political contexts it can mean 'erring, fault, guilt, offence, crime'. See NIDOTTE, II, pp. 87-93; HALOT, pp. 305-306 חַטָּאת

The community presents two goats as a sin/purification offering (לְהִטָּאֵת) and a ram as a whole burnt offering (לְעֹלָה). Aaron is to present both goats (it is specifically stated both of them) before Yahweh at the entrance of the tent of meeting. From the following verses (8-10) we learn about the procedure with the two goats (which is then picked up again in vv. 15-16 and 20-22). Aaron is to use lots (גּוֹרָלוֹת) to decide which goat is which. Lots were frequently used to discover the (155x) or הִטָּאֵת (7x) can both refer to either ‘sin’ or ‘sin offering’. For a discussion of הִטָּאֵת as ‘sin offering’ see NIDOTTE, II, pp. 93-100. Scholars interpret the הִטָּאֵת offering in Lev 16 variously. Traditionally it was considered as ‘sin offering’ but according to Milgrom it should be understood as a ‘purification offering’. For a detailed discussion of the הִטָּאֵת offering see J. Milgrom Studies in Cultic Theology and Terminology, SJLA 36 (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1983); ‘Sacrifices and Offerings’ in IDBSup (1976), pp. 763-771; ‘Two kinds of Hatta’t’, VT 26 (1976), 333-337; Gorman, pp. 61-103; N. Kiuchi, The Purification Offering in the Priestly Literature, JSOT Supp 56 (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1987), pp. 143-161; L. Grabbe, Leviticus, OT Guides (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1993), pp. 34-35.

⁵ The root is attested in extra Biblical sources, e.g. in the Ugaritic Aqhat and Keret epics. Although a different term is used for burnt offering, the Ug. vb. ly in the causative is used for offering up incense. In the HB the animal (from the flock or herd or bird) was completely burnt (except its hide which was given to the priests) on the altar. Burnt offerings were in use before the tabernacle system (Gen 8:20) and continued after the construction of the tabernacle at altars and high places (Judg 6:26; 1Sam 7:9-10; 2Sam 24:22-25; 1Kgs 18:38-9; etc.). Since the sanctuary was more than an altar, this system required additional sacrifices (sin and guilt offerings, Lev 4:1-6:7). Because the tabernacle was the place where God was present it needed to be kept holy and purified, the people also had to be pure in order not to defile the sanctuary (Lev 15:31). There are other instances where the burnt offering was used as part of the purification of the sanctuary, e.g. Lev 1:4; 14:18-20; Lev. 9:7. (HALOT, pp.830-831; NIDOTTE, III, pp. 405-409; Grabbe, Leviticus, p. 31). On the question of the atoning nature of the burnt offering see summary of views in NIDOTTE, III, pp. 409-412. Major sections of the burnt offering regulations for the tabernacle are Lev 1:3-17; 6:8-13; 7:8; Num 15:1-10.

⁶ The verb כִּפֶּר appears 102x in the HB (92x in the Piel); most of the occurrences are in Exod-Num, but also in Ezek and elsewhere. It is usually derived from either the Akkadian kuppuru, ‘to wipe off’, ‘cleans ritually’ or the Arabic kafara, ‘to cover, hide’. The usual English translation is ‘to atone’ or ‘to expiate’ (HALOT, pp. 493-495). However, Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, has argued that this translation is incorrect in most cases. Different meanings predominate, and the term’s context as well as other issues (e.g. prepositions attached to it or its semantic field) has to be taken into consideration. Some poetical texts (e.g. Jer 18:23, Isa 27:9) suggest the notion of purging, purifying, and this meaning is supported by the ritual texts (pp. 1079-1084). In Lev 16 the Piel form of the verb occurs 16x (vv. 6, 10, 11, 16, 17 [2x], 18, 20, 24, 27, 30, 32, 33[3x], and 34) most often with עֹלָה (6x). Here the concept of kipper seems to be directly related to ‘uncleanness’ or ‘sins’. Detailed discussions of the term (with Bibliography) can be found in TLOT, II, pp. 624-635; NIDOTTE, II, pp. 689-709. Also in Kiuchi, pp. 87-109; Gorman, pp. 75-102; Grabbe, Leviticus, pp. 40-43; B. A. Levine, In the Presence of the Lord (Leiden: Brill, 1974) pp. 55-77; Hartley, Leviticus, p. 226.

⁷ Noth, pp. 119-121; Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 235-236; Bellinger, p. 99; Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1013-1018; Levine, Leviticus, p. 101.

deity's will, so in this case to find out which goat Yahweh is choosing for himself. It is neither the people nor Aaron who makes the decision, they have no way of knowing beforehand which goat is for Yahweh, therefore they have to bring two identical ones and present them to him. The lots convey Yahweh's decision.⁸

The central section of chapter 16 is the description of the ritual in vv.11-28. The purpose of the הַטָּאָת sacrifice is to כַּפֵּר for Aaron and his household, for the sanctuary and for the tent and outer altar, and perhaps for the people, though this is not explicitly stated. The ritual is as follows: Aaron presents the הַטָּאָת bull and kills it. Then he takes a censer full of coals of fire from the altar before Yahweh and two handfuls of incense and brings them behind the veil. He puts the incense on the coal so that the smoke/cloud would cover the כַּפֵּרֶת. This is perhaps to protect Aaron from the presence of Yahweh. Thus the sanctuary can be a dangerous place if one does not follow rules carefully. Then Aaron takes some of the blood of the bull and sprinkles it with his finger on the front of the כַּפֵּרֶת. He sprinkles some of the blood seven times with his finger before the כַּפֵּרֶת. Then he kills the goat (presumably he comes out from behind the veil to do this) and brings his blood behind the veil and does the same thing as with the bull's blood. The sprinkling of the blood cleanses the sanctuary from the uncleanness of the people's transgression and sins. Then Aaron goes out to the altar and puts some of the bull's and goat's blood around the horns of the altar. With his finger he sprinkles the blood seven times just as he did with the כַּפֵּרֶת.⁹

The bull's and the goat's blood together serve to cleanse and sanctify the altar from the uncleanness (מִטְמָאָת) of the Israelites.

Verses 20-22 return to v. 10 and the fate of the other goat which is now referred to as the 'living goat', הַשְּׂעִיר הַחַי. Aaron deals with the goat after he finished the 'כַּפֵּר – act'.¹⁰ This raises the question whether the azazel goat rite is separate from or part of the 'כַּפֵּר – act'. It seems to be part of the whole ritual, the הַטָּאָת sacrifice, for the following reasons: 1) both goats are הַטָּאָת (v.5); 2) Aaron takes his ritual clothing off and washes himself only after the goat-rite (v.23); and 3) v. 10 states that the goat for azazel is to be presented before Yahweh (לְכַפֵּר עָלָיו). Thus vv. 20-22 should be seen also as a ‘כַּפֵּר –act’.¹¹

⁸ Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1018-1020; Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 236-237; Noth, p. 121; Bellinger, p. 99; Levine, Leviticus, pp. 101-102.

⁹ Noth, pp. 121-124; Levine, Leviticus, pp. 103-106; Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1024-1040; Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 239-241; Bellinger, pp. 99-100; Gorman, pp. 75-81.

¹⁰ This expression is borrowed from Gorman, p. 74 onwards.

Whom is the ‘כַּפֵּר –act’ for? The most likely candidate would be the people. At first glance it would seem that Aaron by laying both his hands on the head of the goat, was transferring all the guilt of the Israelites from the community to the goat which is then sent away from the community. It would take their sins and uncleanness away, thus cleansing them. However, this interpretation is not without difficulties.¹² It has been argued that the sacrificial animal is a substitute for the offerer.¹³ Indeed this view is confirmed by Gen 22:13, where Abraham offered a ram ‘in place of his son’ (תַּחַת בְּנוֹ) Isaac. In Lev 17:11 we read:

For the life of the creature is in the blood, and I have given it to you for performing the rite of expiation on the altar for your lives, for blood is what expiates for a life. (NJB)

The sacrificial animal’s blood contains its life which is substituted for the human life. The blood not only cleanses but also gives life to the offerer.¹⁴

There is another question which is: why is the goat sent away into the wilderness to azazel and not sacrificed as the other animals? We shall return to this later.

¹¹ Jenson also thinks so. He writes: ‘But whatever the history of the ritual, an analysis of the present ritual in its several dimensions reveals that the two parts complement one another in a remarkable way.’ (See P. P. Jenson, ‘The Levitical Sacrificial System’ in Sacrifice in the Bible, ed. by R. T. Beckwith & M. J. Selmon (Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 1995), pp. 25-40, (p. 34). Against this view see Noth, pp. 124-126.

¹² Some (e.g. Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 151-152; Levine, Leviticus, p. 6) see no significance in the laying of the hands; it would simply be a statement of ownership. This view has been criticised by Wenham as being too simplistic and one that would ignore the significance of the Hebrew term סָמַךְ used for the laying of the hands. He argues that the meaning of this term is more complex than simply ‘place’; referring to Isa 59:16; Ezek 24:2; 30:6; Amos 5:19, it rather means ‘to press’. ‘The very action of pressing down on the animal’s head suggests an attempt to establish an identity between worshipper and victim.’ See Wenham, ‘The Theology of Old Testament Sacrifice’, in Sacrifice in the Bible, ed. by R. T. Beckwith & M. J. Selmon (Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 1995), pp. 75-87, (p. 79). Although this view seems a little forced (why would ‘pressing’ signify identification more than ‘placing’ ?), Wenham is right in pointing out that the placing/pressing of the hand on the animal’s head is more significant than simply conveying ownership. Kiuchi, pp. 87-109, has argued that the priest bore the guilt while at the same time cleansing the altar. For a different interpretation see also Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1041-1045.

¹³ By Wenham and others. See references in Wenham, ‘Theology’, p. 79 and notes 13, 14.

¹⁴ Kiuchi, p. 109.

J. Blair 3. Azazel

In vs. 24-25 Aaron performs the whole burnt offerings, both for himself and for the community. This is described in less detail than the sin offering.

Verses 27-28 are dealing with the aftermath of the offerings. The remains of the bull and goat are to be burnt outside the camp and the person who does it has to cleanse himself. It is not specified that this person has to be Aaron.¹⁵

The final verses (29-34) not only set the date for this ritual, but extend it into the future. The initial command given to Aaron remains valid for his successors in all times. The phrase לְדָבָר עוֹלָם, 'as an eternal statute', is repeated 3 times in vv. 29, 31 and 34, making this explicit.

Let us return now to the term עֲזָאזֵל and see what we learn about it from Leviticus 16.

In verse 8 we have גֹּזֵרֵי אֶחָד לַיהוָה and

וְגֹזֵרֵי אֶחָד לְעֲזָאזֵל

יְהוָה being God's personal name, the parallelism suggests that עֲזָאזֵל should be a personal name of a deity too. Further, the fact that the two goats presented were equally of the best quality, since no one knew which would be for Yahweh and which for Azazel, seems to support this suggestion.

Both goats were brought before Yahweh, and the casting of the lots was to find out which of the two goats he wanted for himself. Yahweh chose, Azazel did not; this suggests that Azazel was not a deity on the same level as Yahweh. Even the goat that was to be sent for him was first brought before Yahweh. Yahweh was the overseer of things happening, of the dispatch.

The live goat was sent away for Azazel into the desert, so Azazel's dwelling place was the desert. Thus Azazel was a lesser supernatural being who lived in the desert.

It is usually argued that since the desert was regarded as the place where 'demons' dwelt, and Lev 17:7 forbids the Israelites to sacrifice to the se'irim, thought to be goat-'demons' (satyrs), that Azazel must have been one or the chief of these goat-'demons'.¹⁶ In fact there is no basis for such a claim. Demons did not have a cult nor did they receive sacrifices. Lev. 17: 7 must have referred to sacrifice to foreign deities. The Hebrew Bible has many references to this.¹⁷ Jenson has argued that the priestly writings' central concern is creation, maintenance and restoration of the ordered world.

¹⁵ Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, pp. 1052-1053; Levine, Leviticus, p. 108; Hartley, Leviticus, p. 242.

¹⁶ E.g. Jenson, p. 34; Hartley, Leviticus, p. 238; Levine, Leviticus, pp. 250-253; and see ch.2 section 2.2.1.

The concern with purity and impurity is in part a concern for maintaining boundaries which must not be transgressed. Otherwise there will be a descent into chaos, disaster and death. From this perspective, sacrifice has a crucial role in maintaining order and restoring equilibrium when that order is disturbed. Both sin and impurity can be understood as generating disorder...¹⁸

Both goats were presented on behalf of the Israelite community to be their sin offering. Yahweh's goat was slaughtered to atone for the 'uncleanness' (טִמְאָה)¹⁹ and 'all the transgressions by sin' (וּמִפְשָׁעֵיהֶם לְכָל־חַטָּאתָם) of the Israelites. The use of the same expression for 'transgression by sin' suggests parallelism for 'uncleanness' and 'guilt'. Perhaps the Israelites were guilty of becoming unclean by straying away from Yahweh and turning to other gods (Deut 32:17, 21; Lev 17:7; 1Kgs 16:13, 26; 2Kgs 17:15; Ps 31:6; Jer 2:5; 8:19; 10:8; 16:19; Jonah 2:8, etc.).

Their disobedience made them and the sanctuary unclean; it also brought chaos into the established order. Yahweh cannot dwell amongst impurity, the sanctuary and the people have to be cleansed, chaos unmade and order established.

Through the blood of the sacrificed goat the sanctuary and the people were cleansed. What then was the significance of the second goat? Why was it sent away into the wilderness to Azazel and not sacrificed as the other animals?

¹⁷ E.g. in Pss 16, 106:37 foreign deities are the object of devotion; also Exod 20: 23, 22:20, 34:15; Lev 17:7; Num 25:2; Deut 32:17; 1Kgs 16:13, 26; 2Kgs 17:15; Ps 31:6; Jer 2:5, 8:19, 10:8, 16:19; Jonah 2:8.

¹⁸ P. 32. Gorman has argued similarly, pp. 99-102.

¹⁹ The verb occurs 163x, the adjective 87x and the noun 36x in the HB with 85% of the occurrences in Lev (85x), Num (23x) and Ezek (30x). Ezekiel (Ezek 20:7, 18, 30f.,43, 22:3f., 23:7, 13, 17, 30, 36:18, 37:23, etc.) sees idolatry and adultery as the main causes of defilement (TLOT, II, p. 495-497), and Lev 18-20 also refers to Israel's religious and moral impurity (the whole land could become impure by bloodshed, following the Canaanite practices, etc.). See HALOT, pp. 375-376; NIDOTTE, II, pp. 365-372. In Lev 10-16 it refers to physical ritual uncleanness (NIDOTTE, II, p. 365) but also to moral impurities (Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, p. 1033).

J. Blair 3. Azazel

If by laying his hands on the other goat Aaron transferred the ‘guilt’ (עֲוֹן)²⁰ and the ‘transgressions by sin’ of the Israelites to the goat, this goat would have carried the ‘transgressions by sin’ outside the camp (Num 5:1-3), away from the sanctuary and from the presence of Yahweh into the desert, the place of death. If the goat was a substitute for the people, its going away into the desert would still symbolise the removal of sins or rather sinners from the holy presence. Thus symbolically the guilty people were both removed from the presence of Yahweh because he cannot tolerate impurity or sin, and cleansed through the blood and thus able to continue in covenant relationship with him.

The significance of Azazel is not who he is but what he symbolises. In many ways his role is the opposite of Yahweh’s. Like Yahweh, he is a deity, though it is made clear that he does not possess the same power. Yahweh receives sacrifice, Azazel’s goat is not a sacrifice;²¹ Yahweh dwells in the very centre, the Holy of Holies, Azazel’s place is on the outside, the desert; Yahweh’s dwelling place is pure, the desert is where all impurities can be found; worshipping Yahweh brings life to his people, following other gods brings death to them. Yahweh establishes order, Azazel is the bringer of chaos.

3.3 Conclusion of azazel

The analysis of Leviticus 16 leads to the following conclusions: the azazel rite forms an integral part of the ‘כִּפָּר –act’, the purpose of which is to cleanse and sanctify the altar and the people. ‘Guilt’ and ‘uncleanness’ are parallel terms referring to the Israelites’ sin: straying away from Yahweh and going after other gods. The blood of the bull and one goat wipes away the people’s sin and sanctifies the altar from their ‘uncleanness’. The live goat removes their sin and guilt by literally taking it outside of the community, into the desert, away from the sanctuary. The sanctuary represents ²⁰ עֲוֹן means ‘sin’, ‘iniquity’ or ‘transgression’, and it is used predominantly in religious contexts. It occurs 231x in the HB; its plural form might be used as a general term to include all sins against God. Together with חַטָּא and פְּשָׁע it is the most common term for ‘sin’. These three terms occur together 13x in the HB. It is the ‘key term’ of Lev 16:21-22 according to Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, p. 1043. On this term see HALOT, p. 800; TLOT, II, pp. 862-865; NIDOTTE, III, p. 351.

²¹ As argued above the goat is a substitute for the people, who brought chaos by turning away from worshipping Yahweh and following other gods. The sending of the goat into the desert symbolises the establishment of order by containing chaos in its proper place.

J. Blair 3. Azazel

the presence of Yahweh, the order of creation, while the desert where azazel is found, stands for the chaos that threatens it.

Examining the term azazel we have found that its meaning remains unknown. Although the parallelism with Yahweh in v. 8 suggests that it is a proper name of a supernatural being whose place is in the desert, there is nothing to suggest that it would refer to a 'demon' named Azazel. Despite the various efforts of scholars to prove otherwise, there is no evidence that a mythological figure was behind this term. Azazel's significance in Lev 16 is its symbolic function. Its role is to stand in contrast to Yahweh and as such it could be argued that it is a personification of the forces of chaos that threaten the order of creation.

CHAPTER 4: LILITH IN CONTEXT. AN EXAMINATION OF TERMS RELATED TO IT IN ISAIAH 34 AND OTHER CONTEXTS

4.1 Introduction

The Hebrew term לִילִית is a hapax legomenon; it occurs once in Isaiah 34:14. Earlier in 2.3. we have seen that to interpret it scholars refer to the similarity of the term with the name of a demon known from Mesopotamia and post-biblical Jewish belief. This view then leads to taking other terms in the chapter which are difficult to interpret, such as תַּנִּים, בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, צִיִּים, אַיִים and שְׁעִיר, to be references to ‘demons’ as well. Such a view should be challenged as it appears to be circular (these beings are only ‘demons’ because of their occurrence with לִילִית, etc.), and as it seems to ignore the fact that such an interpretation does not fit the context.

The fact that lilith only occurs here in the entire Hebrew Bible presents difficulties as it is not possible to grasp its meaning from other contexts. However, an examination of all the other terms that are related to it in the chapter can aid in the understanding. Thus before any decisive conclusions are made, a careful analysis of all the terms in their contexts is needed.

The present chapter therefore takes a close look at Isaiah 34 aiming to determine whether lilith and the other related terms are names of/ references to ‘demons’, and whether there are any mythological figures behind them.

4.2 Isaiah 34

v. 14

וּפְנֵשׁוּ צִיִּים אֶת־אֵיִים וְשְׁעִיר עַל־רֵעֵהוּ יִקְרָא אֶת־שֵׁם הַרְגִיעָה לִילִית וּמְצֹאָהּ לָהּ
מְנוּחָה:

And desert creatures meet with hyenas, and the wild goat cries to its companion; yes, there the night bird rests, and finds herself a resting place.

Most scholars agree that Isaiah 34 and 35 form a unit and therefore have to be treated together.¹

¹ See for example the works of J. Barton, Isaiah 1-39, OT Guides (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995), pp. 92-95; O. Kaiser, Isaiah 13-39: A Commentary, transl. by R. A. Wilson (London: SCM Press, 1974), pp. 351-362; C. R. Seitz, Isaiah 1-39, Interpretation (Louisville: John Knox Press,

J. Blair 4: Lilith

Isaiah 34-35 present a conclusion to chapters 28-33, and correspond to chapters 24-27 (which conclude chs 13-23 respectively).² The theme of chapter 34 is judgement against the nations, frequently referred to as גוֹיִם.

The chapter can be divided as follows:

v. 1 Invocation

vv. 2-4 Yahweh's intentions with regard to the nations

v. 2 Yahweh is angry with the nations therefore he destroys them

v. 3-4 consequences of destruction with regard to the people (v. 3) and nature (v. 4)

vv. 5-7 The Sword of Yahweh; slaughter of Edom = sacrifice to Yahweh

v. 5 Sword, being satiated in heaven (referring back to v. 4), descends from there to Edom

v. 6-7 blood and fat of the slaughtered sacrifices will cover Sword and earth

vv. 8-15 Edom's destruction continued

v. 8 Yahweh's Day of Vengeance – in Zion's cause

vv. 9-11 the whole land will lie desolate for generations vv.12-15 kingdom turned into desert, the habitat of wild animals (=destruction)

vv. 16-17 Conclusion/ transition

4.2.1 Isaiah 34:1-7

V. 1 is an invocation that is addressed to the nations and the people (גוֹיִם and לְאֻמִּים), but the second part of the verse implies that it is for all to hear; every living creature of the world, on the face of the earth (תְּכַל) and below it (אֶרֶץ) is to listen and witness,³ and heed what follows.⁴

1993), pp. 236-242 (p. 236); R. E. Clements, Isaiah 1-39, New Century Bible Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980; repr. 1987), 271-275 (p. 271); W. Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39 (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1998), pp. 268-280 (p. 268); J. N. Oswalt, The Book of Isaiah: Chapters 1-39 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans), pp. 606-627 (p. 606); J. D. W. Watts, Isaiah 34-66, WBC 25 (Waco: Word Books, 1987), pp. 1-18; P. D. Miscall, Isaiah 34-35: Nightmare/A Dream, JSOT Supp 281 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1999); J. Goldingay, Isaiah, New International Biblical Commentary (Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 2001), pp. 193-200. Although chapter 35 is not treated in detail in this exegesis, connecting points will be referred to at the relevant passages.

² NIV Study Bible, p. 1045 Notes; Oswalt, p. 607.

³ Kaiser, p. 356. Oswalt disagrees. He maintains that the call is to be sentenced not to be witnesses (p. 608). Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, also imagines a court case here with Yahweh delivering the 'negative verdict that pertains to all nations' (p. 269).

The following verses give a vivid description of the destruction that is to follow. Vv. 2-4 contain Yahweh's intentions regarding the nations. V. 2 starts with an emphatic כִּי, 'for'. This links vv.1 and 2 together, explaining the preceding call in verse 1, and at the same time emphasising Yahweh's wrath in verse 2. However, we are not told what the cause of Yahweh's fury was. Oswald contends that perhaps there was no need to give a reason; the statement 'to destroy them' (הִתְחַרְיֵמָם) would have been enough to any Hebrew hearer. Although not explicitly stated, we can conjecture from this that the nations must have offended Yahweh in that they have not accepted him.⁵ On the other hand, v. 8 might hold a clue as to the reason of Yahweh's anger. Yahweh's day of vengeance against Edom is in the cause of Zion, to uphold his people's strife (NJB: 'lawsuit'). Yahweh fights for his people and he punishes those who are against them. Offending Yahweh's people is ultimately a crime against Yahweh himself.

Yahweh's anger is expressed not with a construct but with a lamedh, קִצְף לַיהוָה, literally, 'anger to Yahweh'. There are another three similar expressions in the following verses, חֶרֶב לַיהוָה, 'sword for Yahweh' in v.6a, זֶבַח לַיהוָה, 'sacrifice to Yahweh' in v. 6d, and יוֹם נִקְמָה לַיהוָה, 'day of vengeance to Yahweh' in v. 8a; all of these except the sword in v. 6a also start with כִּי. These expressions emphasize Yahweh's possession more than a simple construct.⁶

Yahweh's fury is expressed by the parallel terms קִצְף and חֵמָה, 'wrath' and 'fury', and its all-encompassing quality by the parallel expressions עַל-כָּל-הַגּוֹיִם // עַל-כָּל-צְבָאָם, 'upon all the nations' // 'upon all their armies/hosts'.

Miscall remarks that the absence of any introductory or connective waws in v. 2c gives a sense of rapidity to the actions, whereas separating 2c into two shorter cola would 'slow(s) the pace' and the actions would seem more detached from each other.⁷ This is possible, but it is also possible to regard נָתַתֶּם לְטַבַּח, ‘has given them to slaughter’, as explanatory of the preceding Hiphil verb הִתְהַרְיָמוּ. If the audience had any doubts about the meaning of the ban, this is now made clear here and in the following vivid description of destruction in verse 3. Not only can we picture the scene but we can almost smell the stench rising up from the corpses. The poet employs our sense of hearing (v.1), seeing and smelling (vv. 2-3).⁸ Commentators⁹ usually remark that the poet uses holy war terminology in v. 2 (cf. חָרַם).¹⁰

⁴ The pair תִּבְלֵן and אֶרֶץ occur together also in Isa 18:3 and 24:4. Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, makes a similar point (p.28). Clements, Isaiah 1-39, on the other hand argues that the call has to be taken 'rhetorically', the poet's intended audience is his own people, he means to encourage them by showing them the fate of the nations in contrast to that of the faithful in 35:1-10 (p. 272). This is possible but it is more likely that the poet had a universal audience in his mind since vv. 1-4 talk of a universal judgement.

⁵ Oswald, p. 609; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 269.

⁶ So Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 30 and Watts, Isaiah 34-66, p. 8. Watts, however, claims that these possessive expressions stress Yahweh's divine right, and thus he inserts 'Yahweh has the right to ...' in his translation of the respective colas. In agreement with Miscall (p. 30) we see this as unnecessary; the context does not support such a claim.

The scene of devastation continues; the wounded and slain are cast out (יִשְׁלְכוּ), the injured are not tended to, the dead are not buried (v. 3ab). The destruction is all-encompassing, from the ground it reaches heavenwards. Even the mountains are soaked with blood (וַנִּמְסוּ הָרִים, v. 3c), and the terrible smell of rotting corpses goes up towards the sky affecting even the ‘hosts of heaven’ (כָּל-צְבָא הַשָּׁמַיִם, v. 4a).¹¹ They all rot away (וַנִּמְקוּ, v. 4a), and the heavens are rolled away like a scroll (וַנִּגְלוּ, v. 4b). The poet uses three Niphal perfect verbs which ‘add assonance to the other features binding the section’.¹² The verb form changes in 4c to Qal imperfect, ‘and all their host wither’ (יבול). This notion is emphasised by a further two uses of the same root; נבל appears in the following two similes in different forms, as an infinitive construct (כַּנְבֵּל) and as a participle (וּכְנַבֵּלָת).

v. 4c	and all their host withers	וְכָל-צְבָאָם יבול
v. 4d	like a withering leaf from the vine tree	כַּנְבֵּל עֵלֶה מִנֶּפֶן
v. 4e	and like a withering [leaf] from the fig tree.	וּכְנַבֵּלָת מִתְאֵנָה:

Miscall notes that ‘withering is a notable image in Isaiah’,¹³ and that it also prompts one to think of ‘similar sounding words’. For example: נַבְלָה, ‘foolishness’ (9:16; 32:6); נַבְלָה, ‘corpse’ (5:25; 26:19); נַבֵּל, ‘fool’ (32:5-6); נַבֵּל, ‘a jar that can fall

⁷ Isaiah 34-35, p. 31.

⁸ Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 32.

⁹ E.g. Watts, p. 9; Brueggemann, p. 269; Clements, p. 272; Kaiser, p. 356, etc.

¹⁰ Cf. Exod 15; Deut 20:10-18; Josh 10:1, 28, 35; 1 Sam 15: 4-33.

¹¹ כָּל-צְבָא הַשָּׁמַיִם is best taken here as referring to the heavenly bodies, i.e. stars, rather than the ‘armies of heaven’, i.e. heavenly beings. There is no other reference to them or to why they would deserve punishment. The point here is that the destruction is so overwhelming that it affects not only humans but the elements of nature too.

¹² Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 37.

¹³ Cf. Isa 1:30; 24:4; 40:7-8; 64:5. See Isaiah 34-35, p. 41.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

and break' (22:24; 30:14) and a 'harp that can be stilled' (14:11); and נָפַל, 'to fall' (14:12; 21:9). He writes, 'Thus the Hebrew word and root for withering intone a wide variety of other concepts and images: corpses, falling, breaking, fool(ishness), silence, music and hope.' Usually the reference to 'vine and fig tree' is a positive one; we think of a prosperous land (Deut 8:8; 1 Kg 5:5; Mic 4:4; Zech 3:10). It can also be 'an image of destruction when they are removed (Ps 105:33; Jer 5:17).'¹⁴

After describing a general destruction the poet's attention is now turned towards Edom. Some commentators argue that Edom was a representative of all nations in opposition to Yahweh and thus its fate served as a warning to all such nations.¹⁵ In the previous section destruction moved from earth towards the heaven, which was rolled away and all its hosts withered and fallen. Now the destruction continues on earth again. The sword of Yahweh is personified here as his agent of destruction. In v. 5 Yahweh is the speaker;¹⁶ he declares his agent's work finished in heaven, 'for¹⁷ my Sword was satiated¹⁸ in heaven' (כִּי־רִיחַתָּה בַשָּׁמַיִם חֶרְבִּי), now it descends on Edom (הִנֵּה עַל־אֲדוֹמִים תֵּרָד). The Edomites, like the people referred to in v. 2 are 'banned', they are Yahweh's people of herem, עַם חֶרְמִי, destined for complete annihilation.¹⁹ Again, no specific reason is given why Yahweh's anger is focused on Edom. However, there might have been historical reasons for the poet's particular focus as most commentators²⁰ argue, and as the end of v. 5 ('for judgement',²¹ לְמִשְׁפָּט) as well as v. 8 seem to suggest.

Edom's destruction is compared to a sacrifice,

¹⁴ Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 45-46.

¹⁵ E.g. Oswalt, p. 610; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 270; Seitz, p. 238.

¹⁶ BHS suggest emending the 1st p. suffixes to 3rd person but there is no reason for this.

¹⁷ Some commentators (e.g. Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 270; Oswalt, p. 609; Watts, Isaiah 34-66, p. 3) take כִּי in a temporal sense, 'when my sword...'

¹⁸ Watts, Isaiah 34-66, p. 5 adopts Targ's and 1 QIsa^a's reading תִּרְאָה and translates 'is seen'. LXX and Vg read the Qal and have 'is drunk/ satiated'.

¹⁹ Cf. 1 Kgs 20:42; in Isa 10:6 Israel is the 'people of my anger', עַם עִבְרָתִי.

²⁰ See for example Watts, Isaiah 34-66, pp. 10-11; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 270; Oswalt, pp. 610-611; Clements, Isaiah 1-39, p. 273.

²¹ Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, points out that the term מִשְׁפָּט, 'judgement' occurs often in Isa usually in the sense of 'justice' but also in a 'trial' sense in 4:4; 28:6; 41:1; 54:17. He writes: 'in 34:5 it is usually translated "judgement" in a sense that combines the three meanings of the trial, the guilty verdict and the carrying out of the sentence. The violent and bloody context requires this type of understanding, but the sense of justice, of fairness, lingers in the background...' (p. 49).

J. Blair 4: Lilith

v. 6d ForYahweh has a sacrifice in Bozra

כִּי זָבַח לַיהוָה בְּבֹצְרָה

v. 6e and a great slaughter in the land of Edom

וְטָבַח גְּדוֹל בְּאֶרֶץ אֲדוֹם

The slaughter is depicted with gory details, Yahweh's Sword is covered in blood and fat.

v. 6a The Sword of Yahweh is full with blood

תָּרַב לַיהוָה מִלְּאֵה דָם

v. 6b became gorged from fat,

הַדְּשָׁנָה מִחֶלֶב

from blood of lambs and goats;

מִדָּם כְּרִים וְעִתוּדִים

v. 6c from the fat of the kidneys of rams

מִחֶלֶב כְּלִיֹּת אֵילִים

Verse 7 goes on in similar fashion,

v. 7a And the wild oxen go down with them;

וַיִּרְדּוּ רְאֵמִים עִמָּם

v. 7b the young bulls with the mighty ones;

וּפְרִים עִם־אֲבִירִים

v. 7c And their land is satiated/drenched from blood

וַרְוִתָּה אֶרְצָם מִדָּם

v. 7d and their dust from fat is gorged.

וְעִפְרָם מִחֶלֶב יִדְשָׁן:

The extent of the slaughter is emphasised by repeating the words 'blood' and 'fat', and also by the variety of animals killed. The sacrifice is to be taken both literally and figuratively, nothing and no one is to be left alive in the whole land of Edom. Goldingay has pointed out that 'wild oxen and great bulls are not sacrificial animals' (p. 195). Here they refer to the leaders of the nation. Even the mighty ones are powerless when faced with Yahweh's Sword, the agent of his fury and destruction.

4.2.2 Isaiah 34: 8-13b

As mentioned earlier, v. 8, together with v. 5b, could hold the key to understanding the reason behind Yahweh's fury against the nations in general (v.2) and against Edom in particular (vv. 5b-7, 9-17). They place this section in a legal context. Yahweh destroys Edom in 'judgement' (לְמִשְׁפָּט). 'Vengeance' (נִקָּם) and 'recompense/retribution' (שְׁלוּמִים²²) also imply that 'there is some justice to be sorted out with Edom'.²³

²² Only here in Isa, but see also Deut 32:35 ('vengeance' and 'recompense' together); Hos 9:7 ('days of recompense'); Mic 7:3 ('reward, bribe'); Ps 91: 8 ('reward').

²³ Goldingay, p. 195.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

The devastation of the land of Edom continues in vv. 9-15.²⁴ All the people and their livestock are slaughtered but the destruction does not stop there. Everything has to be razed to the ground. Buildings, living quarters, towns and villages are burned (v. 9-10ab) and left to ruin (v. 13ab), even if there were any people left alive they would not be able to call this place a kingdom anymore (v. 10cd,12). The habitable places are taken over by desert land, the livestock replaced by wild animals and desert creatures (v. 11, 13c-15). This image reminds one of ancient Near Eastern warfare; throughout history nations annihilated other nations, completely destroyed towns, entire kingdoms and civilizations disappeared.²⁵

Most commentators see here a parallel to the fate and destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 19: 24-29),²⁶ the brimstone (בְּרִיטִיָּה), all the living including vegetation destroyed, smoke rising from the land. Indeed the imagery and vocabulary are similar even if not identical.

The destruction is complete and final. Oswalt argues that in v. 10 ‘each line begins with a stronger phrase denoting endlessness’.²⁷ Thus it might seem as a contradiction when we are told that a variety of wild animals come and inhabit the now desolate places. If there is no life, no vegetation, how is it possible that wild animals live there? Oswalt argues that as this is poetry, we should not take it literally. However, if we look carefully we can see that the poet purposefully links the images together

²⁴ This is the way commentators usually understand the feminine suffixes in v. 9, i.e. ‘her wadis’, ‘her dust’, ‘her land’ refer to Edom’s wadis, dust and land. However, Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, recently pointed out that Edom is usually referred to with a masc. pronoun whereas Zion, a city is feminine. He divides the verses differently and takes v. 8-9 together, thus the feminine pronouns would be referring to Zion (pp. 58-61).

*Yes, a day of vengeance for YHWH, a year of retribution for Zion’s case.
Her wadis turn to pitch, and her dust to brimstone.
And her land is burning pitch.*

Although Miscall has a point and his interpretation is possible, the context does not support it. Yahweh’s anger was turned against Edom, his sword slaughtered the people and domestic animals of the land and now the destruction continues with burning and erasing towns and buildings to the ground, making the land uninhabitable, making the devastation complete.

²⁵ The Mitanni Empire, the Hittites, Ugarit, Carthage, are just a few examples of once great and soon forgotten empires.

²⁶ Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 272; Clements, Isaiah 1-39, p. 273; Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 59; Oswalt, pp. 614-615; Watts, Isaiah 34-66, p. 12; Kaiser, p. 358. Some liken the destruction to scenery after the devastation by a volcanic eruption (Kaiser, Goldingay) or even after a nuclear bomb (Oswalt, Brueggemann and Goldingay).

²⁷ P. 614. He also notes that this might be seen in parallel with sacrificial fires in the temple that are to be kept burning all the time (Lev 6:13).

building on the earlier ones and achieving a more intense picture at every stage. There is blood-soaked dust (vv. 3c, 7cd) and earth covered with corpses (v. 3ab). The significance of this image is more than just the fact that there was no one left to bury them. In the ancient Near East it was a form of punishment that bodies were left exposed to the birds and wild animals. Fensham writes that this was the fate for example of those who broke an oath or treaty. 'In the Esarhaddon treaty, the threat is made that the corpse of the transgressor shall be food for eagle and jackal.'²⁸ In Numbers 25:4 it was the punishment of the Israelite leaders who allowed the people to worship foreign gods to be killed and their bodies left exposed (וְהוֹקַע אֹתָם לְיְהוָה נְגִיד הַשָּׁמַשׁ, literally 'hang them for Yahweh in the sun'). Similarly in 2 Samuel 21 when the Gibeonites took their vengeance on the sons of Saul and killed them, it was their intention to leave the bodies exposed (וְהוֹקַעְנֵם, v. 6) presumably for the birds and wild animals, as in v. 10 we are told that Rizpah, their mother did not allow the birds and the wild animals to touch her sons' bodies.²⁹

In our passage there is no one to keep these creatures away. The poet describes in detail how they are free to come and take up residence, and the implication is also that they are free to scavenge the corpses. Thus the Edomites are suffering the ultimate punishment.

The animals of vv. 11 and 13-15 are birds and wild animals that now replace the domesticated ones, goats, lambs, rams and bulls of vv. 6 and 7, that have been slaughtered; they are also desert dwellers (see below) because the landscape has changed from populated areas and lush valleys to burnt out, desolate earth. We have the feeling that creation was unmade as the reference to the initial chaos (קִרְיַתְהוֹי וְאֶבְנֵי-בְהוֹי) implies in v. 11cd. There are now no people to rule or work and look after the land. Instead of crops it is only thorns and nettles that grow on the land and even on the ruins of former grand buildings (v. 12, 13ab).

In v. 11 we have four (possible) birds: (קֶצֶת), (קַפּוֹר), (יְנִישׁוּף), and (עֵרָב) nesting in the now desolate place. The identification of these birds or animals is uncertain.³⁰

²⁸ F. Charles Fensham, 'The Treaty between Israel and the Gibeonites', BA 27 (1964), 96-100, (p.100).

²⁹ Other examples are: 1 Sam 17:44, 46; 1 Sam 31:10-12; 2 Kgs 10:8; Jer 7:33, 9:22, 16:4; etc. See also ch.5 n. 100 p. 123.

³⁰ Versions, commentators and Bible translations vary even in translating the same word in different passages. For example BDB's definition for קֶצֶת is 'a bird, perhaps a pelican or a kind of owl';

4.2.2.1 קֶאֱת and קֶפֹד

The קֶאֱת is usually translated as ‘pelican’ perhaps because of LXX and Vg’s rendering,³¹ as the root of the word קֶא or קֶיא means ‘to vomit’,³² and the pelican was thought to feed its young by regurgitating its food. However, as G. R. Driver has pointed out, this is the way many birds feed their young, it is not sufficient to base the translation on this fact alone.³³ Furthermore other occurrences of קֶאֱת do not support the ‘pelican’ translation. קֶאֱת occurs in Lev 11:18 and its parallel Deut 14:17 in a list of unclean birds that are forbidden to be eaten. It is listed with קֶהָם and תֶּנְשֵׁמֶת, both of which are variously translated in the Bible versions.³⁴ Driver has suggested ‘osprey’ for קֶהָם, and ‘little owl’ for תֶּנְשֵׁמֶת. This alone would not rule out translating the word as ‘pelican’. However there are two other occurrences of קֶאֱת, in Zeph 2:14 and in Ps 102: 7, which throw more light on its meaning. In the Zephaniah passage it appears in parallel with³⁵ קֶפֹד in a similar context as in Isa 34:11. Vv. 13-15 speak of the destruction of Assyria, and in particular of Nineveh which becomes desolate (שִׁמְמָה) and dry as the desert (צִיָּה כְּמִדְבָּר).

Flocks and herds will lie down there, creatures of every kind.

The desert owl (קֶאֱת) and the screech owl (קֶפֹד) will roost on her columns (בְּכַפְתֵּי הָיָה).

Their calls will echo through the windows, rubble will be in the doorways, the beams of cedar will be exposed.

... What a ruin she has become, a lair for wild beasts!

All who pass by her scoff and shake their fists. (NIV, vv. 14-15)

Both the קֶאֱת and the קֶפֹד (קֶפֹד) are here creatures that dwell in ruined, desolate places.

HALOT is similar (p. 1058); LXX has ‘birds’ in Isa 34:11, ‘pelican’ in Lev 11:18, ‘cormorant’ in Deut 14:17 and ‘chameleon’ in Zeph 2:14. Similarly RSV has ‘hawk’ in Isa 34:11; ‘pelican’ in Lev 11:18 and Deut 14:17; ‘vulture’ in Zeph 2:14. NJB translates ‘pelican’ and NIV ‘desert owl’ in the passages mentioned. The case is similar with the other words.

³¹ So JPS; NAS; NAU; NKJ; NJB. In Isa 34:11 LXX has ορνεία, ‘birds’, but Vg has onocrotalus, ‘pelican’.

³² BDB 883: 6958; HALOT 1059: 8215.

³³ ‘Birds in the Old Testament: I. Birds in Law’, PEQ 87 (1955), 5-20 (p. 16).

³⁴ In Lev 11: 18 and Deut 1:17 we have for קֶהָם ‘carrion vulture’ (RSV; JPS; NAU); ‘osprey’ (NIV); ‘white vulture’ (NJB); ‘swan’ (LXX). For תֶּנְשֵׁמֶת ‘swan’ (KJV); ‘white owl’ (NIV; NAU); ‘horned owl’ (CJB; JPS); ‘water hen’ (RSV); ‘ibis’ (NJB).

³⁵ See discussion below p. 77.

In Ps 102 the poet describes his state of distress. In verse 7 he likens himself to the כּוֹס הַרְבּוֹת קֵאֵת מְדָבָר which appears in parallel with כּוֹס הַרְבּוֹת.

דְּמִיתִי לְקֵאֵת מְדָבָר הַיְיָתִי כְּכּוֹס הַרְבּוֹת:

I am like a desert owl, like an owl among the ruins. (NIV, v. 7)

Here we have a clear association with the desert and ruined desolate places. Pelicans do not live in such an environment, thus Driver's suggestion that the קֵאֵת is some kind of owl (scops-owl) seems more reasonable.

Beside the above-mentioned Zephaniah passage, קִפּוֹד also occurs in Isa 14:23.³⁶ It is usually translated as 'hedgehog' or 'porcupine' from the root meaning of קִפַּד Piel 'to roll up'.³⁷ As in Zeph 2, in Isa 14:23 it also appears in the context of destruction. Here Yahweh declares the destruction of Babylon.

I will turn her into a place for owls (קִפּוֹד) and into swampland;

I will sweep her with the broom of destruction, declares the Lord Almighty. (NIV, v. 23)

The context of Zeph 2 requires קִפּוֹד appearing in parallel with קֵאֵת to be some kind of a bird; בְּכַפְתֹּרֵיהָ יִלְיָנוּ (Zeph 2:14) can hardly refer to a hedgehog lodging on top of a pillar.³⁸ R. Whitekettle's suggestion of 'ruffed bustard' for קִפּוֹד is followed here.³⁹

³⁶ The versions also take קִפּוֹד of Isa 34:15 as a variant form of קִפּוֹד. See discussion below in 4.2.3.6.

³⁷ The meaning of the word is 'hedgehog' in the cognate languages (MHeb., JArm., Sam., Syr., Mnd., Eth.) and the versions translate the word as such. (HALOT, p. 1117). In Zeph 2:14 קִפּוֹד is translated as 'screech owl' (NIV; CJB); 'bittern' (KJV; JPS); 'hedgehog' (RSV and LXX); 'porcupine' (NJB). In Isa 14:23 we have 'owls' (NIV); 'bittern' (KJV; JPS); and 'hedgehog' (LXX; RSV; NJB; NAU; CJB). In Isa 34:11 NIV is back to 'screech owl'; RSV changed to 'porcupine' and CJB to 'hawk'; KJV and JPS kept 'bittern' and LXX, NJB and NAU have 'hedgehog'. It seems that most Bible versions are inconsistent in their translations.

³⁸ כַּפְתוֹר is a capital of a pillar in Amos 9:1; a knob on a lamp-stand in Exod 25:31,33,34-36; 37:17,19-22 (BDB, 3730, p. 499; HALOT, p. 496).

³⁹ 'Of Mice and Wren: Terminal Level Taxa in Israelite Zoological Thought', SJOT 17 no. 2 (2003), 163-182 (pp.178-179). He argues that Israelite zoological classification (which, he points out, 'as a self-conscious intellectual interest and cognitive method was only found in the priestly thought world', p. 182) distinguished animals according to three main categories of attributes: physical traits, vocalizations, and habitat (p. 175). Desert/wilderness, waste place/ruins are habitats associated with particular aerial animal kinds. He lists all the above discussed birds (pp. 178-179). NIV's translation as 'screech owl/owl' is also possible as it is consistent with the bird's appearance in all the other passages.

4.2.2.2 יְנִישׁוֹף and עֵרָב

יְנִישׁוֹף occurs in Lev 11:17; Deut 14:16 listed as an unclean bird, and in Isa 34:11. LXX and Vg translate ‘ibis’ in Isa 34 and Lev 11, but ‘swan’ in Deut 14 (they use ‘ibis’ for תִּנְשֵׁמֶת there). The Bible versions vary: NIV has ‘great owl’ for all three; RSV has ‘owl’ in Isa 34, ‘ibis’ in Lev 11, and ‘great owl’ in Deut 14; KJV, JPS, NAU and CJB have ‘owl’/‘screech owl’ in Isa 34, and ‘great owl’ in the other two; NJB has ‘owl’ in Isa 34 and ‘barn owl’ in Lev 11 and Deut 14. Some kind of owl seems reasonable. Driver’s suggestion of ‘screech owl’ is convincing and we shall therefore follow that.

Finally, the translation of the fourth creature (bird) עֵרָב is reasonably certain.⁴⁰ The versions and Bible translations agree on ‘raven’ in most of its occurrences, and Driver also suggests ‘raven’ or ‘rook’.

In summary, we have four birds listed in v. 11, the scops-owl, the ruffed bustard, the screech owl, and the raven. However, we have to keep in mind that their identification is uncertain, even when we take all the available information into consideration the best we can do is guess. The point of v. 11 is that these birds can dwell in desert and ruined places. All of them are raptors, they eat live prey or carrion.⁴¹

4.2.3 Isaiah 34: 13c-15

The difficulty of identifying and/or interpreting the animals/creatures of our passage continues in the following verses. In these verses we have again six terms that refer to some kind of creatures; the translation of some of them very much debated. Some commentators argue that the poet illustrates the destruction with images of wild animals and ‘demonic’ creatures. So Kaiser, Watts, Burrelli, Brueggemann and Miscall regard two or more of the creatures as ‘demonic’. They all take לִילִית to be the Mesopotamian demoness or Lilith of later Jewish belief⁴², and שְׁעִיר as a goat-

⁴⁰ Also appears as an unclean bird in Lev 11:15; Deut 14:14; as raven or type of crow in Zeph 2:14; Ps 147:9; Gen 8:7; 1 Kgs 17:4,6; Prov 30:17; Job 38:41; Cant 5:11.

⁴¹ Driver, ‘Birds in Law’, p. 19. These birds can still be seen by birdwatchers in the Arava valley, north of Eilat, near Kibbutz Lotan, according to <http://www.birdingisrael.com> [accessed 2007-02-06].

⁴² By ‘later Jewish’ the beliefs of post-biblical and medieval Judaism are meant.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

‘demon’,⁴³ but they seem to disagree regarding the nature of the צַיִּים and the אַיִּים. Brueggemann takes them as simply animals, ‘wildcats’ and ‘hyenas’; Kaiser regards צַיִּים (‘devils’) but not אַיִּים (‘hyenas’) as ‘demonic’. Miscall follows Watts and Wildberger and translates them as ‘demons’ and ‘phantoms’. Burrelli is not sure about these two but is inclined towards a ‘demonic’ interpretation simply because they are listed together with שְׂעִיר and לִילִית.⁴⁴

A close look and examination of all these terms here and in their other contexts is needed. Initially they are left untranslated.

v.13c	and it becomes a dwelling of tannim ,	וְהָיְתָה נְוֵה תַנִּים
v.13d	a haunt for banot ya‘anah .	חֲצִיר לְבָנוֹת יַעֲנָה:
v. 14a	And syym meet with iyym ,	וּפְגָשׁוּ צַיִּים אֶת-אַיִים
v.14b	And the sa‘ir cries to its companion,	וְשְׂעִיר עַל-רֵעֵהוּ יִקְרָא
v.14c	yes, there the lilit rests,	אֶדְ-שָׁם תִּרְנִיעַה לִילִית
v.14d	and finds herself a resting place.	וּמְצָאָה לָּהּ מְנוּחָ:
v. 15a	There the qipoz nests,	שָׁמָּה קִנְּוָה קִפוּז
v. 15b	and lays, and hatches, and gathers (her young) under her shadow/wing;	וַתַּמְלֵט וּבִקְעָה וְדָגְרָה בְּצִלָּהּ
v.15c	yes, there the dayyot gather each with its companion.	אֶדְ-שָׁם נִקְבְּצוּ דַיּוֹת אִשָּׁה רְעוּתָהּ:

4.2.3.1 תַנִּים

In vv. 13 c and d we have the תַנִּים and the בָּנוֹת יַעֲנָה. The first one of these is the plural of the hypothetical root תַן, but according to HALOT the derivation of the substantive is uncertain. The meaning of the word given there is ‘jackal’ (canis aureus, p. 1759). In Isaiah it occurs in 13:22; 35:7; 43:20, and elsewhere in Jer 9:10; 10:22; 14:6; 49:33; 51:37; Mic 1:8; Ps 44:20; Job 30:29; Lam 4:3.

⁴³ Curiously Watts understands שְׂעִיר to be a ‘demonic’ being but translates it as ‘wild goat’ (Isaiah 34-66, p. 13).

⁴⁴ Kaiser, pp. 352, 359; Watts, Isaiah 34-66, p. 13; Burrelli, pp. 68-73; Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, pp. 82-84; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 271-272. Burrelli writes: ‘The conclusion is that the names mentioned in Isaiah 34:14 refer to beings of a supernatural nature. This is certainly so for שְׂעִיר and לִילִית. צַיִּים and אַיִּים are admittedly uncertain, but the argument that they represent something demonic merely by their placement in the same verse with לִילִית and שְׂעִיר has weight.’ (p. 73) This argument is, at best, unconvincing and it is built on the presupposition that the other two terms refer to ‘demons’ which in itself is questionable.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

In Isa 13: 22 תַּנִּים occurs with אֲרִיִּים but in the previous verse we have צִיִּים,⁴⁵ אֲרִיִּים, בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה, and שְׂעִירִים. The context is very similar to that of the present chapter where the poet describes the destruction of Babylon. The city's fate is similar to Sodom and Gomorrah's (v. 19), complete destruction; no human habitation will be possible for generations and thus no domestic animals will live there, only wild creatures able to inhabit ruined places. LXX and Vg both have imaginary creatures in mind (ονοκενταυροι and sirenae). However, it is more likely that the contrast is between domesticated animals associated with human habitation, and wild creatures associated with ruined places, rather than a mixture of wild animals and 'monsters' (v. 20).

In Isa 35:7 the context is one contrary to the present one; where there was desolation and ruin, life will return in every form, human, plant and animal. There are no other specific creatures mentioned thus the context requires that בְּנֵי תַנִּים here be translated as 'in the haunts of howling creatures' in general rather than 'jackals' specifically.⁴⁶

In Isa 43:20 תַּנִּים and בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה appear in parallel with חַיִּית הַשְּׂדֵה, as animals associated with desert and wasteland (v. 19cd, 20cd). Thus this context indicates that both these animals are wild creatures that live in desert and ruined places.

In all the five Jeremiah passages the word תַּנִּים is associated with destruction leading to desolation and ruined places. In Jer 9:10 Jerusalem is a ruined city where human habitation is not possible, it is a 'haunt for tannim', מְעוֹן תַּנִּים; in 10:22 the towns of Judah are threatened with desolation from the North. The same expression, a 'haunt for tannim', מְעוֹן תַּנִּים, as in the previous passage is used. Similarly in Jer 49:33 and 51:37, Hazor and Babylon respectively become a 'haunt for tannim', מְעוֹן תַּנִּים, because they are a heap of ruins, desolate with no one to live there.

⁴⁵ אֲרִיִּים is a hapax, and only occurs here. The meaning given by HALOT (p. 29) is 'howling desert animals', perhaps 'eagle owl' (NJB); but Driver argues that there is no adequate reason for such a translation, rather he suggests 'hyena'. Some Bible translations have 'jackal' (NIV) or simply 'howling creature' (RSV). There is no way of deciding on the correct rendering, either Driver's or RSV's suggestion is preferable to 'jackal', as that appears in the next verse for תַּנִּים.

⁴⁶ LXX has ορνέων 'birds'; Vg dracones; also KJV: 'dragons'; others mostly 'jackals' (e.g. NIV; RSV; NJB).

In Jer 14:6 ‘wild donkeys’, פָּרָאִים appear in parallel to תַּנִּים. The context is also that of desolation, there is nothing to eat for these wild creatures. Wild donkeys are associated with desert in Jer 2:24 and Job 24:5, and with ruined places in Isa 34:14.⁴⁷ Modern Bible translations agree in their rendering of תַּנִּים as ‘jackals’,⁴⁸ and while Vg consistently offers draconum, the LXX translators varied their options, offering δρακοντων, ‘dragons’ in 9:10; στρουθων, ‘ostriches’ in 10:22 and 49:33, and simply left it out in 14:6 and 51:37.

In Mic 1:8 we have a new aspect of the תַּנִּים which supports this rendering, a reference to their howling (יִלֵּל) which is likened to the sounds of sorrowful mourning and wailing. ‘I will make wailing (אֶעֱשֶׂה מִסְפֵּד) like the tannim (כַּתַּנִּים), and lament (וְאִבְל) like the banot ya‘anah (כַּבְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה).’⁴⁹

There is no new information from Ps 44:20 (19); the psalmist laments that God had crushed or broken him (them) in the place of tannim (בְּמִקְוֵם תַּנִּים). The context is again that of destruction, the faithful are being killed because of God and even by God himself.

As in Mic 1:8, in Job 30:29 תַּנִּים appears in parallel with בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה. Job declares: ‘I am a brother of tannim (אָחִי הָיִיתִי לְתַנִּים), a companion of banot ya‘anah (וְרֵעִי לְכַבְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה).’ Job enlists and complains about his misfortune, ‘mourning’ and ‘wailing’ in v. 31. It appears that in this context as in Micah these creatures figure because of the sound they make. NIV, RSV, NJB, CJB, JPS, and NAU translate ‘jackals’, KJV and Vg ‘dragons’ and LXX ‘sirens’ for tannim, and ‘ostrich’ (RSV, NJB, CJB, JPS, NAU, LXX, Vg) or ‘owl’ (NIV, KJV) for banot ya‘anah.

Finally, in Lam 4:3 we have a reference to female תַּנִּים suckling their young and contrasted to ‘the daughters of my people (בְּתֵעֵמִי)’ who are ‘cruel (אֲכֹזֵר) as the ostriches (?) in the wilderness (כִּי־עֵנִים בְּמִדְבָּר).’

⁴⁷ Wild donkeys also appear in Ps 104:11 (quenching thirst); Hos 8:9 (wandering alone). Other occurrences are Job 6:5; 11:12; 39:5; Sir 13:18 and Gen 16:12 (man like a wild ass).

⁴⁸ NIV; RSV; NJB and others. KJV is consistently translating it as ‘dragons’ following perhaps the Vg which also renders the term as draconum in all the passages mentioned above.

⁴⁹ LXX here translates תַּנִּים as ‘dragons’, δρακοντων, and בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה as ‘daughters of sirens’, θυγατερων σειρηνων. Vg has draconum and strutionum. Modern Bible versions have ‘jackals’ (NIV; RSV; NJB; CJB; JPS; NAU) and owls (NJB, NIV) or ostriches (RSV; CJB; JPS; NAU).

While all the versions agree on the translation of כַּיֵּעָנִים בְּמִדְבָּר as ‘ostrich of the desert’, there are some interesting suggestions for תַּנִּיִּם here. Vg gives the curious *lamiae*⁵⁰, LXX δρακοντες, KJV ‘sea monsters’ and the other versions simply ‘jackals’ (NIV, RSV, NJB, CJB, JPS, NAU).

In summary, we can say that תַּנִּיִּם occurs in contexts where reference is made to destruction; they are wild animals (Isa 43:20) that inhabit the desolate and desert places, and in some passages there is reference to the howling sound that they make (Mic1:8; Job 30:29). A general translation of ‘howling creatures’ or a more specific ‘jackals’ are both possible depending on what the context requires.

4.2.3.2 בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה

The next creatures, the בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, are usually translated as ‘ostriches’ (ancient versions as well as some modern, e.g. RSV, NJB), less frequently as ‘owls’ (NIV). The literal meaning of the expression is ‘daughters of greed’⁵¹ or ‘daughters of the wilderness’,⁵² and because the ostrich is known both to be a greedy bird and to inhabit the deserts of Palestine, the translation of the word as ‘ostrich’ seemed an obvious choice. In the Hebrew Bible the word occurs in Lev 11:16 and Deut 14:15 (in the singular) in the list of unclean birds,⁵³ and in the plural in Job 30:29; Isa 13:21; 34:13; 43:20; Jer 50:39; and Mic 1:8. Most frequently it appears with the תַּנִּיִּם (Job 30:29; Isa 13:21-22; 34:13; Mic 1:8); but wild animals in Isa 43:20 and צִיִּים and אַיִים in Isa 13:21 (as well as אַחִים and שְׂעִירִים) and Jer 50:39 also occur. All the passages except Jer 50:39 have already been discussed above.

The context of Jer 50:39 is very similar to Isa 13:10-22 (and that of Isa 34). The whole chapter is a message/prophecy about Babylon. The prophet declares Yahweh’s word, his sword is coming against/upon the entire city. Babylon’s inhabitants, leaders and ordinary people alike, officials, wise men, the false prophets will be killed; her army, warriors (even the foreigners within) and war equipment (horses and chariots) will be destroyed (vv. 35-37). Not only the living are annihilated but ⁵⁰ This is used by Vg for lilith in Isa 34:14.

⁵¹ From the Syr. ya’ nā and ya’ īn, ‘greedy’ (HALOT, p. 421 and Driver, ‘Birds in Law’, p. 12 and p. 12 n. 53).

⁵² HALOT, p. 421; Driver, ‘Birds in Law’, p. 12 and p. 12 n. 54.

⁵³ LXX, Vg, RSV, NJB, CJB, JPS and NAU translate ‘ostrich’; NIV and KJV have ‘owl’.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

the city is completely plundered and left empty (v. 37). However, there is more to come, because the place is made completely uninhabitable as the waters dry up (v. 38). The comparison to Sodom and Gomorrah appears here too. As God destroyed (‘overthrew’) those cities and made it impossible for people to live there (v. 40), so here too, the place will not be inhabited for generations only by some wild creatures who are able to live in ruined and desolate places, לָכֵן יֵשְׁבוּ צִיִּים אֶת-אֲיִים וַיֵּשְׁבוּ בְּהַ בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה (v. 39).

From these passages it is clear that similarly to the תַּנִּינִים, the בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה, (as well as the צִיִּים and the אֲיִים so far) are creatures that inhabit ruined and desolate places, and they utter wailing cries similar to mourning sounds. These features are not characteristic of ostriches, as Driver has argued, but can be applied to owls. He writes:

These are all habits of the owls, so that the bat yaanah may well be the eagle-owl, a large owl which is found in semi-desert areas covered with scrub, where it rests on bushes during the day and hunts partridges, hares and rodents, by night; in Egypt it inhabits the steep cliff-like sides of mountains and temples whether ruined or intact. In Palestine it occurs more frequently than any other owl except the little owl. (‘Birds in Law’, p. 13)

LXX translated the expression as ‘sirens’ (or ‘daughters of sirens’) in Isa 13:21; Jer 50:39 and Mic 1:8 (while Vg kept to the ‘ostriches’ in these passages) but as ‘ostriches’ in the other passages. This, and the fact that they used ‘sirens’ for the תַּנִּינִים elsewhere, clearly indicates that the versions were in difficulty translating these terms. As mentioned above, there is no reason to imagine some kind of monsters or mythical creatures in some of the passages but not in others; the contexts are consistent in referring to animals/birds associated with ruined or desert places to contrast them with animals that are associated with human habitation. Thus Driver’s suggestion for translating the בְּנֹת יַעֲנָה (followed by KJV and NIV) as ‘eagle-owl’ is in agreement with all the contexts of the term.

The animal imagery continues in vv. 14-15. The audience can see as well as hear the wild creatures in the description as they take over the ruined places and make it into their home.

4.2.3.3 צַיִים and אַיִים

צַיִים and אַיִים appear in v. 14a. The first term has 10 occurrences, of which 4 times HALOT derive the word from a hypothetical word of Egyptian origin, dʿy, ‘river-going ship’.⁵⁴ The other 6 occurrences are in: Isa 13:21; 23:13; 34:14; Jer 50:39; Pss 72:9 and 74:14. The second term has 40 occurrences, 37 times its meaning is clearly ‘coast, island’ or ‘shore’; only 3 times (Isa 13:22; 34:14 and Jer 50:39) does it refer to something different.⁵⁵ In Isa 34:14 and Jer 50:39 אֶת־אַיִים צַיִים appear together in one expression; in Isa 13:22 אַיִים is parallel to תַּנִּינִים, but in v. 21 צַיִים also appears (along with other creatures). As seen in the discussion of the passage earlier,⁵⁶ these creatures appear in a context where the poet describes the complete destruction of Babylon. The once proud and arrogant city that was one of the greatest cities of the world is now reduced to the state of Sodom and Gomorrah, so utterly devastated and ruined that not even the nomadic tribes who are used to living in harsh conditions would be able to set their tent up and shepherd their flocks there. In contrast to their flocks appear the different wild animals which would inhabit the ruined palaces and temples. In the places where the presence of sacrificial and domestic animals once meant activity and life, now the presence of these strange scavengers represents devastation and death. There is no need to read into these verses anything mysterious,⁵⁷ the meaning of vv. 21-22 is clear. Watts highlights the point very well when he writes:

Although precise identification of many of the animals mentioned in these verses is difficult, the general sense is clear enough. These are animals which inhabit dark and lonely settings. There is something vaguely ominous about many of them. The mighty city is silent except for the hoots and howls of the night-dwellers. The lovely palaces and mighty fortresses alike have become the home of the jackals and hyenas who can only feed on the carrion left behind when the lions have eaten their fill. How are the mighty fallen! (Isaiah 1-33, p. 310)

⁵⁴ In Num 24:24; Isa 33:21; Ezek 30:9; and Dan 11:30 (HALOT, p. 1020).

⁵⁵ HALOT, p. 38.

⁵⁶ See above.

⁵⁷ The presence of ‘demons’ or ‘demonic’ animals alongside real ones, as does for example Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 122-123; Kaiser, pp. 20-21; Burrelli, pp. 73-74.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

In a very similar context, in Jer 50:39, צַיִּים, אֲיִים and יַעֲנָה appear as taking over the ruined and devastated place that once was the mighty Babylon.⁵⁸

The צַיִּים also appear in Isa 23:13 alone in what appears to be a more general sense. The chapter is a prophecy about Tyre, and in v. 13 the poet reminds his audience of Babylon's fate described earlier in ch.13. Babylon had been destroyed, made into a ruin, a place for the wild creatures in ch.13:21-22, here (23:13) represented only by the צַיִּים (יִסְדְּרוּהָ לְצַיִּים).⁵⁹ There is nothing more specific said about them, the word is usually translated as 'desert creatures' (KJV, NIV, CJB, NAU) or 'wild beasts' (RSV, NJB).⁶⁰

In Ps 72:9 it is more likely that the word refers to humans rather than animals⁶¹ as it appears in parallel with אֵיב, 'enemy' in a context describing the characteristics of a great king. He will judge and defend his people, he will be well-known and mighty, his enemies and צַיִּים shall bow down before him. Because of the parallelism with 'enemy', some versions take צַיִּים in a similar sense, thus RSV has 'foes'. Others have a more general translation, 'nomads' (NAS, NAU) or 'desert dwellers' (KJV, NIV, CJB, JPS).⁶² Nothing specific can be said about the word, though the context here and the word's other occurrences make the 'desert dwellers' translation the most plausible.

Finally, the last occurrence of צַיִּים is in Ps 74:14 where in vv. 12-17 God is described as a mighty warrior king (with reference to his battle with the Sea and Leviathan, vv. 12-14) as well as one who has power over nature and its forces (vv. 15-17). The translation of the word as 'desert creatures' in v. 14 at first glance would appear contradictory, as it is Leviathan, the creature of the sea, that is fed to the people of the צַיִּים, dwellers/creatures of the desert. However, when we look at the context carefully we see that it fits. We notice that in singing God's praises in vv. 12-17 the psalmist employs not only parallelism but also a series of merismus which serve to emphasize the greatness and all-encompassing power of God. Thus God is the one who gives Leviathan, the mighty creature of the sea to be food for the צַיִּים , ⁵⁸ See discussion of the passage above in 4.2.3.2.

⁵⁹ On the difficulties of interpreting this passage see for ex. Oswalt, n. 11, p. 426.

⁶⁰ LXX and Vg both leave it out; JPS translates 'shipmen'.

⁶¹ NJB translates 'the Beast'.

⁶² LXX has Αἰθιοπες, 'Ethiopians'.

creatures of the desert; he opens up (בִּקְעָתָהּ) springs and streams (מַעְיִן וְנַחַל), and dries up (הוֹבִשָּׁתָהּ) rivers (נְהַרֹת); he rules day (לְיָדָה יוֹם) and night (לְיָדָה לַיְלָה); he was the one who established sun (שָׁמֶשׁ) and moon (כְּאוֹר); set the boundaries of earth (כָּל-גְּבוּלוֹת אֲרֶץ), and made the seasons (קִיץ וְחֹרֶף). God's role and actions are emphasised by a series of Hiphil (3) and Piel (2) verbs and by the emphatic repetition of the personal pronoun, אֲנִי (7 times in 5 verses). Thus we can conclude that although again nothing specific is said about the צִיִּים, from the context it is clear that it refers to some creature whose environment is opposite to that of Leviathan, the creature of the sea.⁶³ The opposite of sea, a great expanse of water, is lack of water, i.e. desert. Thus the most plausible explanation of צִיִּים here is 'creatures of desert'.⁶⁴

In summary, we can say that צִיִּים and אֲיִים also appear as creatures that live in desert and ruined places. From its parallel occurrences with תַּנִּים and בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, the אֲיִים are probably also howling creatures; of the צִיִּים all we can say is that they are desert dwellers. The modern translations are consistent with this sense; the ancient versions saw mythical creatures.⁶⁵ It is similar with the אֲיִים, where most versions offer 'hyena' and the ancient ones various imaginary creatures.⁶⁶

4.2.3.4 The שְׂעִיר

In v. 14b שְׂעִיר appears which many commentators take to refer to some kind of satyr-like 'demon', probably imaginary,⁶⁷ although some earlier commentators argued that they were real and were worshipped by the early Israelites as gods or representatives of gods.⁶⁸ Furthermore, on the basis of the word's occurrences in ⁶³ Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, notes that there is a pun in צִיִּים with צִיָּה 'thirsty' (Isa 35:1) which underlines our point (p. 83).

⁶⁴ It is interesting to note that similarly to Ps 72:9, the LXX translated the word as Αἰθιοψιν, 'Ethiopians'. NIV, RSV, NJB, CJB and NAU understood it as referring to animals/creatures of the desert/wilderness, and KJV and JPS as to the people of the desert.

⁶⁵ NIV, RSV and NJB have variations of wild/desert creatures (NJB, CJB and JPS have 'wild cats' in Isa 34 and Jer 50). LXX has 'demons' and 'idols that dwell in the islands' in Isa 34:14 and Jer 50:39 respectively, and Vg has daemonia and dracones in those passages.

⁶⁶ So NIV, RSV and NJB. KJV has 'wild beasts of the islands'. CJB and JPS translate 'jackals/hyenas'. LXX has οὐκεντραθοποι in Isa 13 and 34 and 'daughters of sirens' in Jer 50; Vg has onocentauris in Isa 34, 'howling creatures' in Isa 13 and fatuis ficariis in Jer 50.

⁶⁷ As the 'satyr' translation suggests. Satyrs were part human and part goat hybrid creatures in Greek mythology.

⁶⁸ Oesterley & Robinson, p. 113.

Lev 17:7; 2 Chron 11:15 and possibly 2 Kgs 23: 8 they argue that when Yahweh worship could no longer tolerate worship of other gods, these ‘former gods’ were reduced to the status of ‘demons’.⁶⁹

We now turn to examine the occurrence of the word in the above-mentioned three texts.

4.2.3.4.1 Leviticus 17:7

Lev 17 is the beginning of the section that is usually referred to as The Holiness Code (chs. 17-26), the central idea of which is Israel’s holiness as a people.⁷⁰ The theme of ch. 17 is blood and its proper handling. After the introduction (vv. 1-2) two main sections can be distinguished. Vv. 3-9 contain laws concerning sacrifice, and vv. 10-16 laws concerning the eating of blood.

Vv. 3-4 declare that sacrificing an ox (שׁוֹר), a lamb (כֶּשֶׂב) or a goat (עִז) is equal to bloodshed if it is done in the wrong place; the consequence of such unlawful sacrifice is being cut off from the people (וְנִכְרַת הָאִישׁ הַהוּא מִקֶּרֶב עַמּוֹ).⁷¹ Proper (lawful) sacrifice consists of bringing the sacrificial animal to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting in order to present it to Yahweh. Vv. 5 and 7 explain the reason behind introducing this law. Clearly, as they have done often through their history, the Israelites were sacrificing to other gods than Yahweh.⁷² Thus the ‘wrong place’ in fact means sacrificing to the wrong deity. V. 5 spells out that the law was introduced precisely because of this.

v.5

לְמַעַן אֲשֶׁר יָבִיאוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־זִבְחֵיהֶם אֲשֶׁר הֵם זֹבְחִים עַל־פְּנֵי הַשָּׂדֶה וַיָּבִיאוּם לַיהוָה אֶל־פֶּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד אֶל־הַכְּהֵן וְזָבְחוּ זִבְחֵי שְׁלָמִים לַיהוָה אוֹתָם:

This is in order that the sons of Israel will bring their sacrifices which they sacrifice in the Field, and they will bring them to Yahweh to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, to the priest, and he will sacrifice them to Yahweh as shelamim offerings.⁷³

⁶⁹ Langton, pp. 39-41; Burrelli, p. 70; etc.

⁷⁰ Cf. Lev 19:2. For a different view on the position of Lev 17 see G. Wenham, Leviticus, pp. 240-241.

⁷¹ What exactly is the meaning of this expression is not clear.

⁷² Exod 34:15, 16; Judg 2:17; 8:27, 33; 2 Kg 23; 2 Chron 11:15; Hos 1-4, 9; Jer 2, 3; Ezek 16; 23; etc.

⁷³ Scholars disagree regarding the meaning of the shelamim offering here. RSV, KJV, CJB, JPS and NAU have ‘peace offerings’ (so also Noth, p. 128); NIV ‘fellowship offerings’ (this is the understanding of Bellinger, p. 107, too); NJB ‘communion sacrifices’. E. S. Gerstenberger, Leviticus: A Commentary, OT Library, trans. by D. W. Stott (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1996),

This verse should be read together with v. 7, the first part of which is an expansion on the second/sub clause in v. 5 (אֲשֶׁר הֵם זֹבְחִים עַל־פְּנֵי הַשָּׂדֶה).

וְלֹא־יִזְבְּחוּ עוֹד אֶת־זִבְחֵיהֶם לְשַׁעִירִם אֲשֶׁר הֵם זֹנִים אַחֲרֵיהֶם ...

v. 7ab: And they shall no longer sacrifice to the se'irim, after/for whom they prostitute themselves...

Clearly the sacrifices that the Israelites were offering to the se'irim stand in parallel to the sacrifices they were offering in the Field.⁷⁴ The prohibition comes as a consequence of this happening. This suggests that we have here a reference to the Israelites worshipping and sacrificing to foreign deities. This is supported by the use of אֲשֶׁר הֵם זֹנִים אַחֲרֵיהֶם, 'for whom they prostitute themselves' (v. 7). The metaphor of playing the harlot is often used in reference to Israel's unfaithfulness to Yahweh.⁷⁵ These deities were not necessarily goat-shaped; the word שַׁעִירִים can have other meanings.⁷⁶ The context should be the best indicator of the meaning of the word which here is idolatry, hence the need for this law forbidding sacrifice to idols.⁷⁷ As the basic meaning of the word שַׁעִיר is 'hairy one', perhaps here we have another term used in a sarcastic or degrading sense that refers to these deities, similar to 'strangers' (זָרִים), 'abominable things' (תּוֹעֵבֹת), 'shedim' (שִׁדִּים) and 'unknown gods' (אֱלֹהִים לֹא יָדְעוּם) used in Deut 32: 16-17 and elsewhere.⁷⁸

To conclude from this text that the se'irim must have been goat-shaped 'demons' or satyrs that lived in the desert whom the Israelites were worshipping and to whom they offered sacrifice is reading into the text.⁷⁹ There is no evidence to support such a has 'meal offerings' (p. 234); and Levine, Leviticus, p. 114, and Hartley, Leviticus, p. 272, understand it as 'sacrifices of well-being'.

⁷⁴ Whether the expression עַל־פְּנֵי הַשָּׂדֶה means literally 'in the field' or generally the countryside is difficult to say. It also occurs in Lev 14:7; 2 Sam 11:11, etc.

⁷⁵ See examples in n. 73 above.

⁷⁶ In Deut 32: 2. See 6.4., p. 198 n. 10.

⁷⁷ LXX recognized the context and translated ματαιοίς 'worthless', 'meaningless'; a term that it uses especially with reference to idols for pagan worship (e.g. Hos 5:11; Jer 2:5; Amos 2:4; Zech 11:17). See Muraoka, GELS, pp. 357-358.

⁷⁸ E.g. זָרִים in Pss 44:21; 81:10; Isa 17:10; 43:12; Hos 8:12; תּוֹעֵבֹת in Isa 41:24; 44:19; 2 Kgs 23:13; שִׁדִּים in Ps 106:37.

⁷⁹ Noth (p. 131); Hartley (Leviticus, p. 272); Levine (Leviticus, p. 114) regard the se'irim as 'demons' in goat shape (NAS, NAU, CJB and NKJ also translate 'goat demons'; KJV has 'devils'); while Wenham (Leviticus, p. 243) and Porter (Leviticus, p. 139) regard them as 'demons' who took the form of satyrs (also RSV, JPS and NJB). Bellinger's view seems confused, for him v. 7 'prohibits any sacrifice to goat idols or satyrs, a kind of demonic figure or alien deity that had some connection with conclusion. Proponents of such a theory seem to disregard a number of facts that contradict the suggestion. Nowhere in the ancient Near East were demons worshipped, and nowhere did they receive sacrifice. In fact this is one of the major characteristics that differentiate gods and demons.⁸⁰ Satyrs were imaginary creatures from Greek mythology associated with woodlands not desert, wasteland or fields. N. H. Snaith rightly notes that, ‘The whole of this identification of the שְׂעִירִים with goats and satyrs is mistaken. It is due to the introduction of Greek and Roman ideas into a Palestinian environment to which they do not belong.’⁸¹ Snaith goes on to suggest that rather than ‘demons’, the se’irim were ‘the rain-gods, the fertility deities, the baals of the rain-storms.’ This is possible but remains rather conjectural and it is not supported by the text.⁸² All we can conclude from Lev 17 is that the Israelites were sacrificing to the שְׂעִירִים, and that the term most likely refers to foreign deities, perhaps used in a satirical sense.

4.2.3.4.2 2 Chronicles 11:15

2 Chron 11 and 12 tell the story of Rehoboam after the Israelite kingdom split, and it should be viewed in parallel with 1 Kgs 12:25 - 14:20. Commentators point out that 2 Chron 11 in fact ‘fills the space originally created by the omission of the story of Jeroboam’, and that its present place is entirely theological.⁸³ There are three (new) wild goats.’ (p. 107) It is not clear whether he equates these terms or cannot make up his mind about the meaning. Earlier scholars like Oesterley & Robinson (pp. 112-113) and Langton (pp. 39-41) recognize that the satyr translation is ‘misleading’, and argue that the se’irim were once deities but with the establishment of Yahweh worship later became demonized. Gerstenberger’s view is similar. He argues that Lev 17 refers to an ancient custom of sacrificing to ‘demons’ but at the time of the book’s composition this ‘demon motif’ was no more than ‘a historical theme that was hardly still relevant’ (p. 237).

⁸⁰ See p. 11, also W. Robertson Smith, pp. 119-123; 538-539; *EncJud*¹, p. 1522.

⁸¹ ‘The Meaning of שְׂעִירִים’, VT 25 (1975), 115-118 (p. 118).

⁸² Snaith’s suggestion is based on a ‘fertility-myth’ interpretation of the Ugaritic Baal cycle which has now been questioned by several scholars. For the interpretation of the Baal cycle see for example M. S. Smith, ‘Interpreting the Baal Cycle’, UF 18 (1986), 313-339; The Ugaritic Baal-cycle: Introduction with Text, Translation and Commentary of KTU 1.1-1.2, VT Supp. 55 (Leiden: Brill, 1994), I; N. Wyatt, ‘Arms and the King: The Earliest Allusions to the Chaokampf Motif and their Implications for the Interpretation of the Ugaritic and Biblical Traditions’, in ‘Und Mose schrieb dieses Lied auf’: Studien zum Alten Testament und zum Alten Orient, ed. by M. Dietrich (Münster: Ugarit-Verlag, 1998), pp. 833-882, esp. pp. 848-861.

⁸³ S. Japhet, 1 & 2 Chronicles: A Commentary, OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1993), p. 663. See also H. G. M. Williamson, 1 and 2 Chronicles, New Century Bible Commentary (Grand Rapids : Eerdmans; London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1982), pp. 238-245; S. J. De Vries, 1 and 2 Chronicles, (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989), pp. 277-284; S. L. McKenzie, 1-2 Chronicles, themes in ch. 11 (noted by all commentators⁸⁴), Rehoboam's building vv. 5-12; religious aspects vv. 13-17; and Rehoboam's family (wives and sons) vv. 18-23. Japhet has pointed out that Jeroboam's story in 1 Kings is also built up around these themes, and that in fact the stories of the two kings represent an antithesis (p. 663).

Chapter 11 presents Rehoboam in a positive light (building work and a large family were considered divine blessing) in contrast to Jeroboam.⁸⁵ The emigration of the priests and Levites in vv. 13-17 serves a double purpose. It throws a negative light on Jeroboam and his religious reforms while at the same time it serves to strengthen Rehoboam, a further sign of Yahweh's blessing.⁸⁶ The reason for the priests and Levites abandoning their lands and property (אַת־מִנְרֵשִׁיהֶם וְאַדְזָזָתָם) was that Jeroboam rejected them. This is expressed by the Hiphil form of the verb זָנָה (הִזְנִיחָם), usually meaning 'reject', which therefore has a stronger sense than just rejection.⁸⁷ Jeroboam cast them out because he had no use for the servants of Yahweh having rejected not only the priests but their god as well.

v. 15 וַיַּעֲמֵד-לוֹ כִּבְהִימִים לְבַמֹּת וְלִשְׁעִירִים וְלַעֲגֹלִים אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה:

Jeroboam appointed his own priests to serve 'goats' and 'calves' which he made; these were the false gods he was now following. Commentators usually take the 'calf' as referring to idols (the golden calf idols that Jeroboam made for the people as an alternative for the worship of Yahweh), but frequently understand the שְׁעִירִים as 'demons' ('goat-demons' or 'satyrs').⁸⁸ Dillard takes both terms as referring to idols.⁸⁹ Regarding the calves he argues that although Jeroboam originally might not Abingdon OT Commentaries, (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 2004), pp. 260-269; J. A. Thompson, 1,2 Chronicles, The New American Commentary 9 (Broadman & Holman Publishers, 1994), pp. 252-257; J. M. Myers, 2 Chronicles, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965), pp. 67-71; R. B. Dillard, 2 Chronicles, WBC 15 (Waco: Word Books, 1987), pp. 90-111.

⁸⁴ See n. 83 above.

⁸⁵ The Chronicler's omission of 1 Kings 12:20 makes Jeroboam responsible for the northern rebellion.

⁸⁶ McKenzie, p. 265; Dillard, p. 97.

⁸⁷ HALOT, p. 276.

⁸⁸ McKenzie, p. 266; Myers, 2 Chronicles, p. 70; Japhet, p. 668; Thompson, 1,2 Chronicles, p. 255. Williamson, p. 244, notes alternative proposals but retains 'the satyrs' translation (cf. Lev 17:7). He is right to point out that the Chronicler's purpose in adding the reference was to show Jeroboam being in contravention of Lev 17:7.

⁸⁹ 'goat and calf idols he had made' (p. 90).

J. Blair 4: Lilith

have intended them as idols but simply as pedestals for the ‘invisible Yahweh’,⁹⁰ by the time of the ‘later biblical writers/editors’ the distinction would have been lost and they would have viewed the calves as idols (pp. 97-98). Dillard seems to point to Egyptian influence in making the calf idols. He writes:

However, it should be kept in mind that while the Levant does not show evidence of theriomorphic deities, this stricture does not apply to the iconography of Egypt, where deities are routinely portrayed in animal form. The two instances of calf idol production in the Bible occur on the heels of experience in Egypt, at the Exodus (Exod 33) and at Jeroboam’s return from exile there. (p. 98)

But what about the ‘goats’? Dillard’s suggestion, however attractive it may seem, is unsatisfactory as it does not explain the reference to the שְׁעִירִים and their connection to the ‘calves’.

It is interesting that the Chronicler adds the reference to the שְׁעִירִים here, which is missing from the later reference in 2 Chron 13:8-9 and also from the account of Jeroboam’s cult in 1 Kgs 12. However, in the light of the Chronicler’s concern with the Levites, this insertion can easily be understood as an allusion to Lev 17:7.⁹¹ Dillard argues that by doing this the Chronicler ‘has enhanced the apostasy of Jeroboam in two ways’; he did not only reject the levitical priests but was also in transgression of the law in Lev 17:7 (p. 97).

We have argued above that the term שְׁעִירִים in Lev 17:7 was used in a derogatory sense to refer to the pagan deities after whom the Israelites went; this makes perfect sense in the present case too. V. 15 is full of the Chronicler’s contempt of Jeroboam ⁹⁰ Two questions arise here: first, whether Jeroboam intended the calves as idols or not, and second, the relationship of Jeroboam’s calves in 1Kgs 12:26-31 and the ‘golden calf’ in Exod 32. Both issues are debated by scholars. For a discussion see commentaries, for ex. J. T. Walsh, 1 Kings, Berit Olam, (Collegeville: The Liturgical Press, 1996), pp. 171-181; S. J. DeVries, 1 Kings, WBC 12 (Waco: Word Books, 1985), pp. 160-163; J. Gray, I & II Kings: A Commentary, 2nd fully rev. edn, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1970), pp. 315-318; M. Cogan, 1 Kings, AB (New York: Doubleday, 2001), pp. 357-364. Whatever the original intentions of Jeroboam were, in the text as we have it, he appears as an idolater. Walsh (p. 172) writes that a literary analysis is different from a historical one, and that: ‘The Jeroboam we meet in 1 Kings is an idolater and calls his golden calves “gods”, even if that depiction defames the historical king.’ Walsh argues similarly about the relationship of Exod 32 and 1 Kgs 12; regardless of which text was first, once they are part of a canon the reader cannot read of Jeroboam’s calves without making the connection with Aaron’s one. Jeroboam compounds his sin of idolatry even more when he presents the calves as the gods ‘who brought you up out of Egypt’ (cf. Exod 32:4), a title that belongs to Yahweh (p. 173).

⁹¹ This is more so in a literary analysis which deals with the text as we have it. The reader inevitably makes the connection. See n. 90 above.

and his cult. Naturally he refers to the king's abomination in sarcastic tones. LXX uses two terms for שְׂעִירִים here, εἰδωλοῖ, 'idols', and ματαῖοι, 'profane things' which is in accordance with this sense.⁹²

4.2.3.4.3 2 Kings 23: 8

In this passage the term only appears if we accept the emendation of הַשְׂעִירִים to שְׂעִירִים.⁹³

Chapter 23 is to be read together with the previous one as an account of Josiah's reign and reform,⁹⁴ with the reform taking the centre stage. The reform occurs in Josiah's 18th year (22:3),⁹⁵ after the finding of the lawbook which many scholars argue was the Book of Deuteronomy.⁹⁶ The previous years are not detailed, all we know is that the king walked in the way of David and did not turn away from it (22:2).

Some scholars see Josiah's act as a way of asserting his independence in the face of Assyria's demise and interpret the reform as the expulsion of Assyrian astral deities from the temple.⁹⁷ To the contrary, Hobbs claims that Josiah's reform was rather a purging of the cultic practices in Judah and Jerusalem of those Canaanite elements which were introduced by King Manasseh and his son Amon (p. 322). However, this might be too narrow a view as the king's actions are directed against the high places built by Solomon (v. 13), and by Jeroboam (v. 15) as well as the altars of Manasseh (v.12). B. Long sees the material in ch. 23 as falling into a twofold division, with vv.

⁹² Vg has daemonum and Tg לְשִׂירִין for שְׂעִירִים but keep 'calves' for עֲגָלִים. There is no reason to regard one as 'demon' but to take the other as referring to an idol. It is more likely that both terms are used to refer to pagan deities in a belittling way; calling them 'goats' and 'calves' does not conjure up an image of powerful deities.

⁹³ First suggested by Houbigant, Graetz and Hoffman (for reference see Bibliography in J. A. Emerton, ' "The High Places of the Gates" in 2 Kings 23:8', VT 44 (1994), 455-467).

⁹⁴ T. R. Hobbs, 2 Kings, WBC 13 (Waco: Word Books, 1985), p. 342; B. O. Long, 2 Kings (Grand Rapids: W. B. Eerdmans, 1991), p. 269; M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1988), pp. 277- 281.

⁹⁵ Cogan and Tadmor argue that the 'eighteenth year' should not be understood literally; historically Josiah was free to act prior to this date (pp. 296-297).

⁹⁶ P. House, 1,2 Kings, The New American Commentary 8 (Nashville: Broadman & Holman, 1995), pp. 381-391 (pp. 382-383); Cogan and Tadmor, p. 294. The question of the content of the book and whether it was this content that made Josiah act is still debated. See for example the discussions in House, p. 382; Hobbs, p. 325.

⁹⁷ E. g. Nicholson and Bright; quoted in Hobbs, p. 322.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

4-9 describing the cleansing of the land and the temple in Jerusalem without specifically mentioning kings ('kings of Judah' referred to only in v. 5 in reference to priests appointed by them), and vv. 10-20 linking the various reform acts to kings, as we have seen above, mentioned by name (p. 273). In any case the emphasis is on the act, and not on the object of the cleansing.

The narrative starts with the king, the priests and the prophets as well as all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem (from the smallest to the greatest) going up to the temple, listening to the king's reading of all the words of the Book of the Covenant, and renewing their covenant with Yahweh (vv. 1-3).

The reform acts are listed in vv. 4- 24. In v. 4 we are told that the king commanded (וַיִּצְוֶה) the high-priest, priests and doorkeepers to act (remove things from the temple) whereas in the rest of the account he is presented as the one who acted directly. This was hardly the case, rather he commanded and his orders were carried out (22:3-4; 12; 23:1,4 and 21). However, it was common practice in the ancient Near East that in royal inscriptions all things were attributed to the king personally. It is the king who 'accomplishes great deeds and to him belongs all praise.'⁹⁸

B. Long notes a pattern ('a standard reportorial mold') into which the reform acts fit.

- A. verb + object (the actual cultic reform)
- B. subordinating word (וַיִּשְׁמַע)
- C. a verbal or nominal clause that explains in some way the object of Josiah's action (p. 274)

To these it is possible to add a fourth one - a place is associated with most reform acts, either a place where the items are removed from, or a place where they end up, or both.

- D. place associated with reform acts

These places are also often introduced with an וַיִּשְׁמַע, indicating some sort of explanation relating to them.

Thus the following pattern emerges:

⁹⁸ B. Long, p. 274. See also royal inscriptions in Egypt, e.g. the Asiatic campaigns of Amenhotep II, Seti I and Ramesses II, ANET, pp. 245-248; 253-258; etc.

Verse	Subject	Verb/action	Object + אֲשֶׁר + description	Place
v. 4	King (Ordered high-priest; priests and doorkeepers)	Removed (לְהוֹצִיא)	All things (אֲשֶׁר) made for Baal, Asherah and all host of heaven	From temple of YHWH
		Burnt (וַיִּשְׂרֹפֵם)	them	Outside Jerusalem, in the field of Kidron
		Took (וַיִּנָּשֵׂא)	Their ashes	To Bethel
v.5		Annihilated (וְהִשְׁבִּית)	Priests (אֲשֶׁר) appointed by kings of Judah to serve the above
v.6		Took (וַיִּצֵא), burnt (וַיִּשְׂרֹף), ground to powder (וַיִּדְק), scattered (וַיִּשְׁלֹךְ)	Ashera pole	From temple of YHWH To outside Jerusalem, Kidron Valley
v.7	King	Tore down (וַיִּהַץ)	Quarters of male prostitutes	in the temple (אֲשֶׁר) where women wove for Ashera
v.8	King	Brought (וַיָּבֵא)	All priests	From towns of Judah
		Desecrated (וַיִּטְמֵא)	High-places (אֲשֶׁר) priests burnt incense	from Geba to Beersheba
		Broke down (וַיִּנְתֵּץ)	Shrines of the Gates אֶת־בָּמוֹת הַשְּׁעָרִים	(אֲשֶׁר) at the entrance of the Gate of Joshua (פֶּתַח שַׁעַר יְהוֹשֻׁעַ)

J. Blair 4: Lilith

v.10	King	Desecrated (וְטִמְּאָה)	Topheth (אֲשֶׁר) used to sacrifice children in fire to Molech	In the Valley of Ben Hinnom
v.11	King	Removed (וַיִּשְׁבֹּת)	Horses (אֲשֶׁר) dedicated to the Sun by kings of Judah	From entrance to temple of YHWH; near (the room of) Nathan Melech אֲשֶׁר בְּפֶתְחֵי הַמִּזְבֵּחַ
		Burnt (שָׂרַף (בָּאֵשׁ)	Chariots (אֲשֶׁר) dedicated to the Sun v.12	King	broke down (נָתַץ)	Altars (אֲשֶׁר) given by kings of Judah	(אֲשֶׁר) on the roof, near the upper room of Ahaz
			Altars (אֲשֶׁר) given by Manasseh	In the two courts of temple of YHWH
		Removed (וַיִּרְצֵץ)	Them	From there
	Threw (וַהֲשִׁילֵם)	Their ashes	Into the Kidron Valley
v.13 v.14	King	Desecrated (טִמְּאָה)	High places (אֲשֶׁר) built by Solomon to Astoreth of Sidon, to Chemosh of Moab and to Molech of Ammon	(אֲשֶׁר 2x) facing Jerusalem, on the south of the Hill of Destruction
		Smashed (וַשְׁבַּר)	Pillars
		Cut down (וַיִּכְרֹת)	Ashera poles
	Filled (their places) with human bones (וַיִּמְלֵא)	Their places

J. Blair 4: Lilith

v.15	King	Broke down (נָתַץ) Burnt (וַיִּשְׂרֹף) Ground to powder (הִדְקָה לְעָפָר) Burnt (וַיִּשְׂרֹף)	Altar and high place (אֲשֵׁרָה) built by Jeroboam Ashera poles	(אֲשֵׁרָה) in Bethel
v.16	King	Burnt (וַיִּשְׂרֹף) Defiled (וַיִּטְמָאֵהוּ)	Bones on the altar The altar (acc. to the word of YHWH)	Found (וַיִּשְׂרֹף) on the mountain
v. 19	King	Removed (הִסִּיר) Did all that he did in Bethel (וַיַּעַשׂ לָהֶם כְּכָל-הַמַּעֲשִׂים אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה בְּבֵית-אֵל)	Shrines at high places (אֲשֵׁרָה) built by kings of Israel To them	(אֲשֵׁרָה) in the cities of Samaria
v.20		Slaughtered (וַיִּזְבַּח) Burnt (וַיִּשְׂרֹף)	All the priests of the high places Human bones	On the altars On the altars
v. 21	King	Commanded (וַיִּצַו)	Celebrate Passover to YHWH	In Jerusalem (v.20)
v. 24	King	Exterminated (בָּעַר)	Mediums, spiritists, household gods and idols, and all the abominations	In Judah and Jerusalem

J. Blair 4: Lilith

As mentioned above, the places associated with Josiah's reform acts are often introduced with אָשֶׁר, indicating that an explanation follows of the particular place against which Josiah's act is directed. This is the case in vv. 7, 8, 11, 12, 13 (2x), 15, 16 and 17. Further in some cases, this explanation consists of giving the precise location (or detailed description) of the particular object. Thus we find where the quarters of the male prostitutes were in v. 7; where the horses dedicated for the Sun were removed from in v. 11; where the altars given by the kings of Judah (broken down in v. 12) were; where the high places built by Solomon in v. 13 were; and finally the exact location of the shrines of the Gates in v. 8, which was at the entrance of the Gate of Joshua.

בְּמֹזֹת הַשְּׁעָרִים, 'shrines of the gates' or 'high places of the gates' is deemed difficult by commentators; the reading of both terms has been debated, several emendations and interpretations have been suggested. Thus regarding the first term, Hobbs argues that the difficulty lies in that MT's reading 'presupposes the location of several high places at one gate of the city' (p. 334). However, others have argued that בְּמֹזֹת should be re-pointed to read as singular בְּמֹזֶת.⁹⁹ The second term also presents difficulties. There have been some interesting suggestions at interpretation. Thus H. H. Hirschberg proposed 'the columns of the genitals',¹⁰⁰ and J. Gray 'the shrine of the gate-genii'.¹⁰¹ However, none of these suggestions are plausible.¹⁰² Many commentators prefer an emendation of הַשְּׁעָרִים 'gates' to שְׂעִירִים 'satyrs'.¹⁰³ In fact there is no reason to doubt the correctness of the MT reading here.¹⁰⁴ Most commentators and Bible versions translate 'high places of/at the gates',¹⁰⁵ or 'shrines of/at the gates';¹⁰⁶ and that is consistent with the context in which it occurs. Emerton

⁹⁹ Snaith, 'Meaning', p. 116; Emerton, p. 456. LXX and P read the singular, and Targ. can be read either way. Vg supports MT.

¹⁰⁰ 'Some Additional Arabic Etymologies in Old Testament Lexicography', VT 11 (1961), 373-385 (p. 381).

¹⁰¹ He has the Assyrian style guardian deities that stood at the entrances of gates in mind (pp. 730, 735).

¹⁰² See critique of these in Emerton, pp. 457-458.

¹⁰³ Oesterley and Robinson, p. 113; Langton, p. 39; NEB reads 'demons' (margin 'satyrs'); Gray following Hoffman, p. 734; Burrelli, p. 70.

¹⁰⁴ See also Snaith, 'Meaning', p. 116. He argues that the shrines were 'relics' of ancient Canaanite worship rather than 'idolatrous shrines after the Northern pattern'.

¹⁰⁵ Hobbs, p. 329; Cogan and Tadmor, p. 279. So also KJV; RSV; NJB; CJB; JPS and NAU.

¹⁰⁶ House, p. 386; also NIV.

has shown that there is evidence of the existence of shrines at gates in Canaanite and Israelite cities, and that there is no need to emend MT's הַשְּׁעָרִים. There is no contradiction between the reference to 'gate' ('the gate of Joshua', the 'gate of the city')¹⁰⁷ in singular and 'gates' (the high places of the gates) in plural as he explains that city gates in ancient Palestine were constructed as a complex consisting of an inner and an outer gate. Thus שַׁעַר in the singular could refer to 'the complex of gateways as a whole',¹⁰⁸ and בְּמֹת הַשְּׁעָרִים in plural 'may refer to a shrine situated between the two.'¹⁰⁹

In summary, we can conclude that there is no basis for a demonological interpretation of שְׁעִירִים in Lev 17:7 and 2 Chron 11:15. In both cases the word is better understood as an ironic reference to foreign deities worshipped by the Israelites or their kings, and it reflects the authors' contempt of such practices. In 2 Kgs 23:8 there is no need to emend MT's reading.

The word שְׁעִיר (or שְׁעִירִים) occurs some 75 times in the Hebrew Bible with the meaning of 'goat/goats'.¹¹⁰ There is no reason to doubt that this is the meaning of the word in Isa 13:21 and 34:14 too. In both cases it appears in a list of real animals, and this meaning is required by the context. Furthermore we have shown that passages that are used to support a 'demonological' interpretation of the word in the two Isaiah texts cannot be used in evidence as the word there refers to pagan deities in an ironic sense and not to 'demons'.

4.2.3.5. לִילִית

G. R. Driver's article 'Lilith',¹¹¹ has not gained wide acceptance amongst scholars, although it fits the context of the text, and it presents a plausible explanation of the term. He suggests that the לִילִית is the goat-sucker or night-jar, as this would suit 'both the name and the situation.' He argues that several species of the bird can be found in parts of Egypt and the deserts of Palestine and thus 'such a bird, haunting desert regions, admirably suits the prophet's description of Edom lying in ruins, ¹⁰⁷ These two probably refer to the same gate according to Emerton, pp. 464-465.

¹⁰⁸ 2 Sam 18:24.

¹⁰⁹ Emerton, pp. 465-466.

¹¹⁰ HALOT, pp. 1341-1342.

¹¹¹ PEQ 91 (1959), 55-57.

desolate and deserted.’ (p. 56) Driver derives the name of the bird from the root lwy, lyy, lwly, lyly either as ‘descriptive of its rapidly twisting and turning flight’, or as relating to its nocturnal habits (as the Heb. word laylah, ‘night’ also derives from this root).¹¹² Both these explanations of the bird’s name would suit its habits.¹¹³ Driver’s suggestion is attractive because it would mean that in vv. 13-15 we have four kinds of animals (תַּנִּינִים, אַיִים, צִיִּים and שְׂעִיר) and four kinds of birds (לַיְלִית, בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, קַפְזוֹ and דְּיִוֹת) listed, all of which inhabit desert and desolate places. In fact the objection to deriving lilith from laylah refers to deriving the demon Lilith’s name from it because of a false folk etymology (lilith being a night-demon). However, as we have argued above, in our passage there is no reason to see a ‘demon’ in a list of real animals, thus the derivation of לַיְלִית from לַיְלָה ‘night’ becomes possible (cf. Akk. pl. liliātu > lilātu).

If we look at the parallelism in vv. 13c-15 we can divide the passage into two sections, v. 13c-14b and vv. 14c-15c. Both sections start with a general term (in v. 13c תַּנִּינִים referring to ‘howling creatures’ in general (cf. Isa 35:7) and in v. 14c לַיְלִית, a possibly general term referring to night creatures/ birds) followed by more specific animal/bird names, בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, צִיִּים and אַיִים all being howling creatures, and then the קַפְזוֹ and דְּיִוֹת, possibly some kind of birds. These are described as making the ruined place into their homes (becomes a dwelling, a haunt // rests, finds a resting place) where they meet with other similar creatures as well as find their own companions and then raise their young. V. 14a is parallel to 15a and 15b expands on the theme (meet – nest – lay – hatch - care for young). Both sections end with a reference to one of the animals meeting its companion (רָעָהוּ in v. 14 and רָעוּתָהּ in v. 15), again the second expanding slightly on the first. While the wild goat cries out looking for his companion, the דְּיִוֹת, having found theirs, meet with them.

Thus we can see that the context of our passage supports Driver’s suggestion for the interpretation of לַיְלִית as being a night creature, possibly a bird. However, his suggestion of night-jar or goat-sucker is perhaps going a little far, there is no evidence to support it and, as we have seen, there is no real need for a more specific identification. A general term is all that is required.

¹¹² HALOT list the following parallels: Ug. Ll; Can. lēl; Mo. לַלָּה; OArm. Yaud. and JArm. לַיְלִיא; Pehl. Nab. לַיְלִי; Eth. lēlit, Akk. pl. liliātu (p. 528).

¹¹³ Driver, ‘Lilith’, p. 56.

4.2.3.6 קפוז and דִּיּוֹת

Finally, there are two creatures in v. 15, קפוז and דִּיּוֹת. The first one is a hapax legomenon. The versions take it as a variant form of קפוזר.¹¹⁴ BDB suggests ‘arrow-snake’ which lives in trees, and this has been followed by Watts and some modern versions.¹¹⁵ ‘Owl’ has also been suggested.¹¹⁶ Driver rejects both ‘owl’ and ‘arrow-snake’ and suggests ‘sand-partridge’ which lives in dry and desolate places and which hops (this action is suggested by the root קפז).¹¹⁷ However, as Burrelli¹¹⁸ rightly pointed out, there is not enough evidence to allow us a specific identification of the קפוז, all we can say from the context is that it is a desert bird.

The precise meaning of דִּיּוֹת is also uncertain; it occurs only 3 times in the Hebrew Bible, as an unclean bird in Lev 11:14 and Deut 14:13, and in the present passage. The meaning of the root דאד from which it derives¹¹⁹ is ‘to fly, swoop down on prey’,¹²⁰ thus some kind of bird of prey can be envisaged. Vulture,¹²¹ kite (black or red kite)¹²² and buzzard¹²³ have been suggested, with ‘kite’ being the most preferred translation. Black kites in Egypt were useful scavengers and could be found near the ¹¹⁴ Thus LXX and Vg offer ‘hedgehog’, Targ and P ‘owl’. See HALOT, p. 1117.

¹¹⁵ Isaiah 34-66, p. 4 and JPS. NJB has ‘snake’ and NAU ‘tree snake’. Kaiser has ‘viper’ (p. 352).

¹¹⁶ NIV, RSV; KJV: ‘owl’; CJB: ‘hoot owl’. Also Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 271 and Oswalt, p. 616.

¹¹⁷ HALOT, p. 1118. See G. R. Driver, ‘Birds in the Old Testament: II Birds in Life’, PEQ 87 (1955), 129-140 (pp. 135-136). Driver’s suggestion is followed by Whitekettle, p. 179. See also discussion in Burrelli, n. 39, p. 69.

¹¹⁸ As above.

¹¹⁹ HALOT, p. 207 and also p. 220.

¹²⁰ Cf. Deut 28:49; Jer 48:40; 49:22, also Ps 18:11.

¹²¹ LXX in Lev 11:14 and Deut 14:13, but not in Isa 34:15, where it has ‘deer’ (ελαφος); KJV in all. Oswalt thinks that ‘vulture’ probably refers to the black kite (p. 617). Watts, Isaiah 34-66, translates ‘vultures’ but adds that kite would also fit the context (pp. 4, 6). NJB and CJB in Isa 34:15 but not in the others.

¹²² NIV has ‘red kite’ in Lev and Deut and ‘falcons’ in Isa; NJB has ‘kite’ in Lev. RSV, JPS have ‘kite’ in all three; NAU in Lev and Deut but ‘hawks’ in Isa 34. Kaiser has ‘kite’ (p. 359) and so does Whitekettle (p. 179). Driver, ‘Birds in Law’, suggested ‘black kite’, and argued that the term would refer to both black and red kites. As the red kite was only a migrant in Palestine, it is unlikely that flying high it would have been distinguishable from the black kite (pp. 10-11).

¹²³ NJB and CJB in Deut 14:13; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 271.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

dead.¹²⁴ Thus kites fit with the context in our passage; after the destruction described here scavenger animals and birds would have had plenty of bodies to feast upon.

Vv. 13c-15 can now be translated thus:

- 13c And it becomes the dwelling of howling creatures, 13d a haunt for eagle-owls.
14a And desert creatures meet with hyenas,
14b and the wild goat cries to its companion.
14c Yes, there the night bird rests,
14d and finds herself a resting place.
15a There the desert bird nests,
15b and lays, and hatches, and gathers (her young)
Under her shadow/wing;
15c yes, there the kites gather, each with its companion.

As mentioned above the passage divides into two sections. Vv. 13c-14b culminate the description of the desolation by introducing into the scene new wild creatures, ‘another group of inhabitants of this eerie land’.¹²⁵ The desolate scene is emphasized in the second section by the repetition of שָׁם, ‘there’ (3 times), and it is intensified by the addition of אֵינֶנּוּ, ‘yes/indeed’ (2 times). This recalls and contrasts with v. 12, וְאֵין־שָׁם מְלוּכָה, ‘there is no kingdom’, this is what is now in its place.¹²⁶

However, the second section also has a positive image and it points to what follows in ch. 35. The finding of a resting place, nesting, laying and hatching, gathering together all convey a peaceful image and a promise that:

The desert and the parched land will be glad;
the wilderness will rejoice and blossom.
Like the crocus, it will burst into bloom;
It will rejoice greatly and shout for joy.
...
They will see the glory of the Lord,
the splendour of our God. (NIV, Isa 35:1-2)

¹²⁴ D. M. Dixon, ‘A Note on Some Scavengers of Ancient Egypt’, World Archaeology 21 no. 2 (1989), 193-197 (p. 195).

¹²⁵ Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 82.

¹²⁶ Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, p. 83.

4.2.4 Isaiah 34: 16-17

The two masculine plural imperative verbs in v. 16 (יִקְרְאוּ and יִרְשׁוּ) address no one in particular, therefore it is directed to everyone in general, in a similar way to the beginning of the poem where all the nations and the earth were called to witness what was said. It is not clear what the poet meant by the Book/scroll of Yahweh; סֵפֶר יְהוָה could refer to a number of things.¹²⁷ The important fact is that it is Yahweh's work. The scroll contains everything that has happened, and everything that happened was ordered and carried out by Yahweh: his mouth commanded (כִּי־פִי הוּא צִוָּה); his breath gathered (וְרוּחֹו הוּא קִבְּצָן); and his hand apportioned (וַיִּדְרו חֵלְקֶתָהּ). Vv. 16b and c (none of these are missing; none is lacking her companion), vv. 17c and d (they possess it for ever; from generation to generation they dwell in it) allude to previous verses. They neatly conclude the immediately preceding section as well as the entire poem. However, besides echoing the desolation of vv. 7-15, they also look forward to the restoration that follows in chapter 35 vv. 1-10.¹²⁸

4.3 Conclusion of lilith

In order to determine the significance of the term lilith in the Hebrew Bible, whether it is the name of a 'demon' and whether there is a mythological figure behind it, a careful exegesis of Isaiah 34 is required.

It is found that because of the assumption that לִילִית is the 'demoness' Lilith, some of the other creatures that also occur in the passage are regarded as 'demonic', whilst ¹²⁷ Oswalt lists four possibilities: 1) it is directed towards later readers with the intent of comparison (this writing vs. facts of their day); 2) this prophecy related to an earlier one (Isa 13:21-22); 3) postexilic interpolation as a proof of the prophecy; 4) literary allusion to a 'Book of Destiny' (pp. 617-618). Miscall, Isaiah 34-35, sees it as a 'multilevel image' alluding to the scroll written by Yahweh (Exod 32:32-33); the one written by Moses (Exod 24:4-7); part or the whole of the HB; the Isa scroll (Isa 29:11-12, 18; 30:8), and even the heavens which were rolled up like a scroll in v. 4 of this poem (p. 87).

¹²⁸ Watts, Isaiah 34-66, interprets vv. 16-17 differently, he translates v. 16 thus (p. 4):

Examine Yahweh's scroll and read aloud.

Let nothing be left out.

Let (no line) miss its parallel line.

For Yahweh's mouth commanded (them) and his Spirit gathered them.

This is an interesting interpretation but it has the disadvantage of missing the allusions to preceding verses presenting more a break than a transition between the two chapters. See also Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 272-274; Seitz, pp. 238-242; Kaiser, pp. 359-360.

J. Blair 4: Lilith

others as real animals. Each term in question was then examined and it was shown that although most of these are difficult to translate exactly, and in many cases only a general designation can be offered, the contexts in which they occur do not support a demonological interpretation for any of them.

Thus in vv. 8-13b the קֶאֱת and the קִפְדֹר (קִפְדֹר) are creatures that dwell in ruined, desolate places. The suggestions of Driver and Whitekettle for קֶאֱת as (scops)owl and for קִפְדֹר as ‘ruffed bustard’ seem reasonable. Similarly the יְנִשְׁוֹף and עֵרָב can be identified as ‘screech owl’ (Driver) and ‘raven’ respectively.

The creatures of vv. 13c-15 are the much debated תַּנִּים, בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, צִיִּים and אִיִּים, שְׂעִיר and לִילִית. The תַּנִּים are wild animals that inhabit the desolate and desert places, and in some passages there is reference to the howling sound that they make (Mic1:8; Job 30:29). A general translation of ‘howling creatures’ or a more specific ‘jackals’ are both possible, depending on what the context requires. The general translation of בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה as ‘ostriches’ is not supported by the texts. As the others before, they too are animals/birds associated with ruined or desert places. Driver’s suggestion of ‘eagle-owl’ fits all the contexts of the term. The צִיִּים and אִיִּים also appear as creatures that live in desert and ruined places. From their parallel occurrences with תַּנִּים and בְּנוֹת יַעֲנָה, the אִיִּים are probably howling creatures too. Of the צִיִּים all we can say is that they are desert dwellers. The שְׂעִיר, thought by many to be some kind of satyr-like demon in some passages, is best understood in its usual sense as ‘goat’ (both in Isa 13:21 and 34:14) as it appears in a list of real animals, and this meaning is required by the context.

All these creatures are real animals and birds who inhabit desert and ruined places, some of them scavengers who feast on dead bodies. In Isaiah 34, after the complete destruction of Edom and all its people and livestock, only these wild scavengers would be able to survive. Thus there is nothing to support the view that lilith is a ‘demoness’ or other mythological character. Like the other terms, it also refers to an animal. More specifically, the context requires that לִילִית is regarded as a bird. Some scholars such as Seitz and Clements follow RSV and translate ‘night-hag’, while Oswalt agrees with NIV’s rendering of the word as ‘night-bird’. The versions do not offer any light on the matter, LXX has ovoκενταυρος (which is also offered for אִיִּים in Isa 13:12) and Vg lamia (also used for תַּנִּים in Lam 4:3). Driver’s suggestion that לִילִית is a night bird is found to be the most plausible explanation of term, one that fits the context.

CHAPTER 5: DEBER IN THE HEBREW BIBLE

5.1 Introduction

The noun דֶּבֶר occurs in 48 verses in the Hebrew Bible;¹ is usually translated as ‘plague’ or ‘pestilence’ and held by some to be the name of a ‘demon’ in three passages, Psalm 91:5-6, Hosea 13:14 and Habakkuk 3:5 (see 2.4). In chapter 2 it was shown that this view is based on similarities with Mesopotamian religion and the fact that in two of the usually cited three passages the term appears together with reshef

¹ These are: Jer 14:12; 21:6, 7, 9; 24:10; 27:8, 13; 28:8; 29:17, 18; 32:24, 36; 34:17; 38:2; 42:17, 22; 44:13; Ezek 5: 12, 17; 6:11, 12; 7:15; 12:16; 14:19, 21; 28:23; 33:27; 38:22; Exod 5:3; 9:3, 15; Lev 26:25; Num 14:12; Deut 28:21; 2 Sam 24:13, 15; 1 Kgs 8:37; 1 Chr 21:12, 14; 2 Chr 6:28; 7:13; 20:9; Ps 78: 50; Amos 4:10. It is דֶּבֶר in Hab 3:5, דֶּבֶר־יְהוָה in Hos 13:14 and מִדֶּבֶר in Ps 91:3, 6. On top of these there are extra-biblical (Sir 39:9; Sir 40:9; 4Q 285 1:9; 4Q 422 4:6; 4Q Ps a 1.2:1 and 1.3:4) as well as other possible occurrences if emended. Thus according to DCH II: 411 we should consider Jer 9:20 and 9:21; Ps 41:9 (41:8), Ps 107: 20; 1 Sam 4:8 and Ezek 13: 28. In the case of Jer 9:20 it is suggested that דֶּבֶר be inserted after בְּחַלּוֹנֵינוּ ‘into our windows’, and בָּא ‘has entered’, deleted. I do not see any reason for doing this; in Jer 9:20 we find a personified death that is climbing/going up through windows. Elsewhere, for ex. in Joel 2:9 there are locusts (likened to a mighty, terrible army), also personified, going through windows like thieves. In Jer 9:21, it is suggested, דֶּבֶר should be emended to דְּבַר. True, some Greek texts (Origen, Lucian, Theodotian) read here deber= plague (θανάτω), and the major LXX mss as well as P omit the word. However, I do not see why the MT should be emended; the Piel impf. verb makes perfect sense in the context (v. 19: ‘hear’ v. 20: ‘speak’), whereas if we change the pointing of דֶּבֶר we have created another problem, the beginning of the verse would not make sense. Ps 41:9 is difficult and would be worth further investigation. דֶּבֶר-בְּלִיַּעַל literally means ‘a thing/ matter of beliyya‘al’, variously translated as ‘a lethal substance’, see Dahood, Psalms 1, 1-50, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965), p. 251; ‘a devilish disease’, see P.C. Craigie, Psalms 1-50, WBC 19 (Waco: Word Books, 1983), p. 318; NIV: ‘a vile disease’; NJB: ‘a fatal sickness’; RSV: ‘a deadly thing’. While it is possible to emend דֶּבֶר to דְּבַר ‘plague’, it is not necessary. Other occurrences of the expression, e.g. Ps 101:3; Deut 15:9 would not support such emendation. On Belial in the OT see the article by V. Maag, ‘Belija‘al im Alten Testament’, ThZ 21 (1965), 287-99; also Tromp, pp. 125-128. The emendation of דְּבַר־וְ ‘his word’ to ‘his plague’ in Ps 107:20 is possible (as suggested by Dahood, ‘Hebrew-Ugaritic Lexicography’, Bib 45 (1964), 393-412, esp. pp. 410-2) but not necessary. There are other instances where דֶּבֶר functions in a personified sense but without the need to change it. In Ps 147:15 it appears in parallel with אִמְרָתוֹ ‘his command’, so it clearly carries the meaning ‘his word’. See also the comments in L.C. Allen, Psalms 101-150, WBC (Waco: Word Books, 1983), p. 59 n. 20a,b,c. In 1 Sam 4:8, DCH suggests reading בְּמִדְבָּר ‘with plague’, instead of ‘in the desert’ בְּמִדְבָּר. So also Dahood, ‘Lexicography’, pp. 401-2, who explains the prep. בְּמִדְבָּר with reference to Ugaritic. He writes: ‘A stylistic quality of the Keret Legend is balancing of the prepositions b-bm; l-lm; k-km; a similar phenomenon would explain the faulty word-division of MT.’ The commentaries of R. W. Klein, 1 Samuel, WBC 10 (Waco: Word Books, 1983), pp. 36-38 and P. K. McCarter, 1 Samuel, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1980), pp. 102-109, follow this reading. LXX understood it as καὶ ἐν τῇ ἐρημῷ ‘and in the desert’. NIV, NJB, RSV follow MT. The emendation would also make sense; however, whether it is necessary would need further investigation which lies outside the scope of this study.

and qeteb, other supposed ‘demons’, rather than on an examination of all the texts in which it occurs in the Hebrew Bible.²

Therefore the present chapter takes a close look at all the occurrences of deber aiming to determine its meaning, whether it is the name of a ‘demon’, and whether there is a mythological figure behind it. The passages generally considered to contain deber as a ‘demon’/evil deity are examined first, followed by an investigation of the term in the Jeremiah and Ezekiel passages, then its other occurrences.

5.2 Passages generally considered to contain deber as a demon

Scholars who argue that deber is a demon or evil deity in the Hebrew Bible usually consider three passages, Psalm 91:5-6; Hosea 13:14 and Habakkuk 3:5. We shall look at these texts first.

5.2.1 Psalm 91: 1 – 6

vv. 1-6

1 יֵשֶׁב בְּסִתְרֵי עֲלִיּוֹן בְּצֵל שְׁדַי יִתְלוֹן:
2 אָמַר לַיהוָה מַחְסֵי וּמְצוּדָתִי אֱלֹהֵי אֲבֹתַי-בּוֹ:
3 כִּי הוּא יִצְיִלְךָ מִפֶּחַח יְקוֹשׁ מִדְּבַר הַוּוֹת:
4 בְּאֲבָרְתוֹ יִסְדֶּךָ לֵךְ וְתַחַת-כַּנְפָּיו תִּחְסֶה צְנֹה וְסַחֲרָה אֲמֹתוֹ:
5 לֹא-תִירָא מִפֶּחַח לִילָה מִחֵץ יַעֲוֹף יוֹמָם:
6 מִדְּבַר בְּאִפְלֵ יִתְלַךְ מִקֶּטֶב יָשׁוּב צְהָרִים:

v.1.

Dwelling in the hiding place³ of Elyon, in the shadow⁴ of *Shadday*⁵ he will spend the night.⁶

² See 2.4 and in particular the summary in 2.4.2.

³ בְּסִתְרֵי ‘hiding place’ with the purpose of protection, cf. Ps. 27:5; 31:21; 61:5; 1 Sam 20:20; Job 40:21. M. E. Tate, Psalms 51-100, WBC 20 (Dallas: Word Books, 1990), pp.446-459, translates ‘under the protection’ (p. 446); similarly F. L. Hossfeld and E. Zenger, Psalms 2: A Commentary on Psalms 51-100, trans. by L. M. Maloney, Hermeneia (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 2005), pp. 426-433, ‘in the protection’ (p. 426). J. W. Rogerson and J. W. McKay, Psalms 51-100 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1977), pp. 202-205, ‘in the shelter’ (p. 202). Also CJB, NAU, NIV and RSV. NJB has ‘in the secret place’.

⁴ בְּצֵל means ‘in the shadow of’ but similarly to בְּסִתְרֵי it has the connotation of protection (cf. Isa 30:2, 3; 49:2; 51:16; Lam 4:20; Ps 121:5); the two are thus in parallel.

⁵ This name of God only occurs twice in the Psalms: Ps 68 and here (Tate, p. 447).

⁶ לִין means ‘to lodge, spend the night’. NIV has ‘rest’, NJB ‘spend your nights’, RSV, JPS ‘abides’.

J. Blair 5. Deber

v.2.

I will say⁷ to Yahweh, my shelter, my stronghold: My God, I feel safe in you!

v.3.

For it is he who will save you from the *Fowler's*⁸ trap, from Deber's destruction⁹.

v.4.

With his wing-feathers¹⁰ he will cover you and beneath his wings you shall seek refuge; shield and buckler¹¹ is his truth/faithfulness.¹²

v.5.

You shall not be afraid of the Terror of the night,¹³ of the *Arrow*¹⁴ that flies by day.

v.6.

Of *Deber*¹⁵ who walks in darkness, of *Qeteb*¹⁶ who destroys midday.

⁷ LXX read אָמַר here, εἶπαι 'he will say' (BHS crit. app.) RSV has 'he...will say'; NJB 'saying', NIV: 'I will say'. M. Dahood, Psalms II: 51-100, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1968), pp. 328-334, vocalises the verb as imperative (p. 330). Thus 'say'. See also Tate, p. 447 n. 2a. He and Hossfeld and Zenger (p. 426) maintain MT 'I say'.

⁸ The word also occurs in Prov 6:5 and Jer 5:26; in Hos 9:8 it is יָקוּשׁ (cf. Ps 124:7). It is mostly translated as 'fowler', e.g. RSV, NIV, NJB, CJB, Tate, p. 448; Hossfeld and Zenger, p. 426. For a different reading see W. O. E. Oesterley, The Psalms (London: The Macmillan Company, 1939), II, pp. 408-409 and Dahood, Psalms II, pp. 328-331.

⁹ Taking דֵּבַר as personified here. LXX read λογος. So also Oesterley, 'destructive word' (p. 409), Dahood, Psalms II: 'venomous substance' (p. 328), Tate: 'threat of destruction' (p. 448 n. 3c). NAU, NIV and RSV: 'deadly pestilence'; CJB: 'noisome pestilence'; NJB: 'fowler set on destruction'. Taking הַהֲרִיחַ as 'destruction', cf. Pss 52:4; 57:2.

¹⁰ MT has singular but LXX and P read plural here (BHS crit. app.).

¹¹ סִחָרְהָ is a hapax legomenon; the root meaning is 'circle/circumference' (HALOT, p. 750). LXX took it as a verbal form κυκλωσει σε. On וּסְחָרְהָ as (supernatural) protection see further A. A. Macintosh, 'Psalm XCI 4 and the Root סִחָר', VT 23 (1973), pp. 56-62. RSV, JPS have 'shield and buckler'; NJB: 'shield and protection'; NIV: 'shield and rampart'; Dahood, Psalms II, 'shield and buckler' (p.328); Tate, 'shield of protection' (p. 448 n. 4d). Oesterley places 'a shield and buckler is his truth' at the end of v. 7 (p. 408).

¹² NJB has 'his constancy', JPS and CJB 'his truth'.

¹³ Similar use of 'terror' in Job 15:21; 21:9; 22:10; Cant 3:8 'terror of the night'; Jer 49:5; Lam 3:47. For a different rendering see Dahood, Psalms II, 'pack of the night' (p. 331).

¹⁴ 'Arrow' is taken by some to refer to Reshef here. E. g. T. Gaster, Myth, p. 770; Dahood, Psalms II, p. 331. See also 2.6.5.

¹⁵ JPS, NAU, NIV and RSV; Rogerson and McKay, p. 202, and Hossfeld and Zenger, p. 426, have: 'pestilence'. CJB, NJB, Tate, p. 448 n. 6a, translate 'plague'.

¹⁶ NIV, Hossfeld and Zenger, p. 426, Rogerson and McKay, p. 202 have 'plague'; JPS, NAU, RSV: 'destruction'; CJB, NJB, Tate, p. 446 and Dahood, Psalms II, p. 328 have 'scourge'. Oesterley leaves Qeteb untranslated; he believes it to be the name of a 'demon' (pp. 408-410). Qeteb only occurs elsewhere in Deut 32:24; Isa 28:2 and Hos 13:14. On qeteb see ch. 5.

Various questions arise concerning this psalm, for example who is speaking or who is addressed in it, and what is its function? Some believe it to be a royal psalm of trust written by a court poet,¹⁷ others that primarily it was an apotropaic prayer.¹⁸ It has also been argued that its primary purpose is to promote Yahwism against other ancient Near Eastern religions,¹⁹ or that it contains instructions ‘given in the context of worship’.²⁰ More likely it is a ‘prayer-oracle of encouragement to trust God for protection and security.’²¹

It appears that the psalm has two main parts, vv. 1-13 and vv. 14-16.²² The first part is a description of God’s protection; vv. 3-13 are addressed to a single person. They describe the various kinds of dangers that God protects the believer from.²³ The second part has God as the speaker. It comes as a reassurance to the previous declaration of faith.

The main point emphasized in the psalm is that God is the one who protects the believer from dangers because he is the most powerful. To illustrate this better, the poet personifies these dangers. Hossfeld and Zenger describe them as ‘treacherous’, ‘monstrous’, and ‘demonic’ (p. 430). Similarly, Tate thinks that the ‘psalm reflects a thought world in which the presence of demons, demonic possession, and malignant spirits and powers was considered commonplace’ (p. 455). However, this appears to be reading into the text. We shall see below that the psalm itself presents a different interpretation.

Yahweh’s introduction is quite dramatic (vv. 1-2). The use of his different names intensifies the parallelism; Elyon (עֶלְיֹן), Shaddai (שַׁדַּי) are descriptive, they culminate in his personal name, Yahweh (יְהוָה) and end with a simple but dramatic statement: ‘my God’ (אֱלֹהֵי). Yahweh’s protection is illustrated with various ¹⁷ Dahood, Psalms II, pp. 329-330.

¹⁸ Oesterley, p. 407; Burrelli, p. 150.

¹⁹ C. C. Broyles, Psalms, New International Biblical Commentary (Peabody: Hendrickson Publishers, 1999), p. 363.

²⁰ R. Davidson, The Vitality of Worship: A Commentary on the Book of Psalms (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998), p. 303.

²¹ Tate, p. 458. On the various interpretations see also pp. 450-453. Hossfeld and Zenger also understand the psalm as an expression of ‘personal piety’ (p. 429).

²² Hossfeld and Zenger divide the psalm into three parts, vv. 1-2; 3-13 and 14-16 (pp. 427-428).

²³ Tate, p. 450; Hossfeld and Zenger, p. 430.

J. Blair 5. Deber

powerful images (vv. 3-4) such as the mighty mother-bird whose wings hide and protect at the same time, who is gentle towards its young, i.e. the believers, but fierce and dangerous towards those who try to harm them,²⁴ shelter and stronghold, shield²⁵ and buckler.²⁶

V. 3 introduces the threats that one faces; the Fowler's trap (פַּח יְקוֹשׁ), and Deber's destruction (דְּבַר הַיּוֹת), could refer to mortal dangers in general. The dangers in vv. 5-6 are presented in parallel: the Terror at night (פַּחַר לַיְלָה) parallels Deber in darkness (דְּבַר בְּאֶפֶל יְהַלֵּךְ), and the Arrow by day (חֵץ יְעוֹף יוֹמָם) parallels Qeteb at midday (קֶטֶב יְשׁוּד צַהֲרָיִם). The image of the fowler ensnaring the birds conveys the concept of hunting and warfare,²⁷ of dangers that one could probably avoid if only there were someone to warn them.²⁸ Deber's destruction to the contrary represents unavoidable dangers.²⁹ If deber is taken here to refer to infectious disease as elsewhere,³⁰ then the idea is that such a force was unstoppable. It is only Yahweh who can warn of the dangers or who can prevent/stop the spread of the disease. Vv. 5-9a should be read in parallel with vv. 9b-13,³¹ and this suggests that vv. 5-6 should be understood in the light of v. 11. The personified dangerous forces of vv. 5-6 are identified as Yahweh's angels in v. 11. This supports our earlier argument. If Deber and Qeteb are Yahweh's angels, the destruction they cause is unstoppable by human means, it is only Yahweh who can command his angels (מְלֹאכְיוֹ יְצַוֶּה-לָּהֶם) and recall them thus stopping the devastation they could cause (v. 11). Instead of ²⁴ Cf. Ex 19:4; Deut 32:11; Pss 17:8; 63:8.

²⁵ Ps 5:12-13.

²⁶ The many images emphasise the poet's point. See Hossfeld and Zenger, pp. 429-430; Tate, p. 453; A. Curtis, Psalms, Epworth Commentaries (Peterborough: Epworth Press, 2004), pp. 188-189.

²⁷ Tate refers to Johnson who suggested that vv. 5-8 allude to perils of war. Tate disagrees with this, and instead he sees v. 7 as referring to the thousands fallen as a result of the 'plague', i.e. disease (p. 455). The present approach is to take v. 7 as referring to the victims fallen by all the four forces mentioned in vv. 5-6. There is no reason to separate out one or the other force. These personified forces are Yahweh's angels (v. 11), his agents who punish the wicked (v. 8) and can threaten the believers.

²⁸ This can be seen in parallel with v. 13, the lion lying in wait and the serpent attacking unexpectedly are mortally dangerous but possible to avoid. They also belong to the imagery of hunting.

²⁹ Rogerson and McKay, p. 204; Curtis, p. 189. There is nothing to suggest demonic powers are at work here.

³⁰ See below 5.3 (in Jeremiah) and 5.5.2 (Exod 9) in particular.

³¹ Also Tate, p. 456.

J. Blair 5. Deber

destroying they will protect, watch over the ways of the believer (לְשֹׁמְרָיָהּ (בְּכָל-יְדֵרְכָיָהּ).

The last section, vv. 14-16, underscores Yahweh's promise of protection in the form of Yahweh's answer to the believer's prayer.³²

The message of this psalm seems to be that all kinds of dangers can threaten even the believer who is not necessarily deserving of punishment. He is faced with danger at all times, day and night, only God can protect him. The emphasis is on God's role as powerful protector but by personifying the dangers the poet's images convey not only a picture of God as protector but also of Yahweh, the mighty warrior who commands an array of powerful warriors (angels), the Fowler, Deber, Qeteb, the Arrow and Terror. These are all personified dangerous forces that cause death and destruction at the command of Yahweh. There is no need to associate Deber's action with night time and Qeteb's with day time, the reference to night and day is to be taken as a merismus,³³ the point is that the threat is constant, they can strike at any time, only Yahweh knows when. Taking deber to mean 'disease' is consistent with both the context here and its other occurrences. Qeteb refers to some sort of 'destruction'.

5.2.2 Hosea 13:1- 14:1

v. 14

מִיַּד שְׂאוֹל אֶפְרַיִם מִמְּוֹת אֲנָאֵלִים אֱהִי דְבַרְיָהּ מוֹת אֱהִי קִטְבָּהּ שְׂאוֹל נַחֵם יִסְתַּר
מֵעֵינַי:

The passage appears to be a literary unit.³⁴ It describes God's anger against Israel whose guilt seems to have been idol worship. The prophet speaks in vv. 1-3, then vv.

³² Hossfeld and Zenger, pp. 431-432; Tate, pp. 457-458; Curtis, p. 190.

³³ Tate, p. 454.

³⁴ There is disagreement regarding the dividing of this passage. D. K. Stuart, Hosea – Jonah, WBC 31 (Waco: Word Books, 1987), takes 13:1 as belonging to the previous passage, 12:1-13:1: 'There is no evidence ... of a break in the passage before 13:1. ... In 13:2 begins a different accusation ...' (p. 187). Similarly H. McKeating, The Books of Amos, Hosea, and Micah (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1971) reads 13:1 with ch. 12, but he takes 12:14-13:4 as one unit (pp. 146-147). Most commentators place 13:1 with the rest of the chapter. There is no reason to separate v. 1 from ch. 13 and place it at the end of ch. 12. 12:15 ends the threats against Jacob and Ephraim. 13:1 is better understood in the context of ch. 13; vv. 1-3 form a coherent unit. See also J. L. Mays, Hosea: A Commentary (London: SCM Press, 1969), pp. 171-173; F. I. Andersen and D. N. Freedman, Hosea: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1980), pp. 628-629.

4- 15a contain a speech from Yahweh, and finally in vv. 15b-14:1 the prophet speaks again.

Taking vv. 1-3 as belonging together we see a progression from past (v. 1) to present (v. 2) and future (v. 3).³⁵ V. 1³⁶ simply states the reason for God's anger through the example of Ephraim in the past: they were guilty of Baal worship (וַיֵּאָשֶׁם בַּבַּעַל) therefore they were punished with the ultimate punishment, death (וַיָּמָת). V. 2 extends Ephraim's guilt to the whole of Israel; they did not learn, instead the people sinned more and more. Their sin is three-fold:

- Making of idols (of silver; expertly fashioned) מִסִּכָּה
- human sacrifice זִבְחֵי אָדָם
- kissing of the (calf)idols עֲגָלִים יִשְׁקִיזוּ

Their present sin will result in punishment; they will be like (v. 3):

- the morning mist/early dew כַּעֲנַן־בֶּקֶר וְכֹטֵל מִשְׁכִּים
- chaff swirling from threshing floor כַּמֶּזְיָה יֹסֵעַר מִגֶּרֶן
- smoke escaping through a window וְכַעֲשָׂן מֵאֲרָבָה

all disappearing without leaving a trace. The punishment will be, similarly to Ephraim's fate, annihilation. This is vividly illustrated with the series of similes.

In contrast to Israel's terrible sin, vv. 4-6 (in which Yahweh speaks) describe Yahweh's greatness with reference to the exodus. Yahweh was their god (וַאֲנֹכִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיהֶם), cared for them (lit. 'knew them', יָדַעְתִּיהֶם) and pastured them (כִּמְרֹעֵיהֶם) in the desert. Here we have the image of the shepherd, Yahweh, caring for his sheep, the people. But because they turned away from God, the shepherd becomes the wild animal who destroys the sheep. Vv. 7-8 in a further series of similes illustrates this destruction. Yahweh shall be:

- like a lion כְּמוֹ־שִׁחַל
- like a leopard כְּנִמְר
- like a she-bear כְּדַב־שְׂכוּל

³⁵ Mays, Hosea, pp. 171-173; Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, pp. 628-629.

³⁶ There are various difficulties in translating v. 1, e.g. how to read כָּ, the translation of יָדַעְתִּיהֶם (which is a hapax legomenon in the HB, though it occurs in 1QH 4.33) or נִשָּׂא. On the problems of translating v.1 see Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, pp. 626-630; Stuart, pp. 186, 196; H. W. Wolff, Hosea: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Hosea, transl. by G. Stansell, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1974; 3rd printing 1982), pp. 219-225.

- like a lion (again, but a different word used) כְּלִיָּא
- like a wild animal (in general) תַּיִת תְּשָׁדָה

V. 9 is problematic, especially the reading of שָׂחַתְתִּיךָ. MT reads a 3 msg Piel pf. +2 msg suffix, 'it has destroyed you'. However, in light of the context and the use of the root elsewhere in Hosea (e.g. 11:9, 9:9), the reading אֲשַׁחֲתֶיךָ 'I shall destroy you' is preferable.³⁷ The next phrase, כִּי־בִי בְעֵזְרֶיךָ, is also problematic; it can be 'for in me, in your helper' but also 'for against me, against your helper'.³⁸ The latter makes more sense, it provides an explanation for Yahweh's destroying act.³⁹ Because Israel turned to other gods therefore she is against Yahweh who shall destroy them, i.e. the people. Yahweh is both Israel's destroyer and helper. It depends on Israel which aspect is to the fore.

After reference to idolatry (vv. 1-2) and pride (v. 6), vv. 10-11 point to yet another act of Israel's stubbornness, their insistence on having a king.⁴⁰ Andersen and Freedman suggest that the threat of destruction in vv. 9, 15b and 14:1 could be seen as a response to these manifestations of Israel's 'wilfulness'.⁴¹ However, there is nothing to support this. Punishment for these acts follows immediately after their mention, thus for idolatry (vv. 1-2) in v. 3, for pride (v. 6) in vv. 7-8, and for asking for a king in v. 11b. The threat of destruction in vv. 9; 15b and 14:1 would be best taken in a general sense. The message of the passage is that because of Israel's guilt Yahweh shall destroy them; there is no hope as v. 14c makes it clear.

Vv. 12 and 13 are obscure, the discourse changes to third person; even the identity of the speaker is ambiguous.⁴²

³⁷ So P; Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, p. 636; Stuart, p. 200; and RSV. NIV has 'you are destroyed'; NJB: 'you have destroyed yourself'.

³⁸ The preposition כִּי can mean 'against' when it is used with words expressing hostility (BDB 89, II:4; HALOT, p. 104). Examples of such uses can be found in Gen 16:12; Deut 13:10; 1 Sam 5:9; 18:17; Hos 7:14.

³⁹ LXX and P translated מִי instead of כִּי; so also Stuart, p. 200 and Wolff, Hosea, pp. 220-221. There is no reason to emend the text. Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, recognized this but they add 'The sense of the line only emerges if an ellipsis of ps' , "to rebel", is recognized' (p. 636). This is also unnecessary; the context makes it clear what is meant by Israel being against Yahweh.

⁴⁰ 1 Sam 8. This is one of Hosea's favourite subjects; cf. 8:4; 9:9; 10:9-10. See comments in McKeating, Amos, pp. 92-93, 148-149.

⁴¹ Hosea, p. 628.

⁴² For more detailed discussion see Wolff, Hosea, pp. 223, 227-228; Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, pp. 637-639; Stuart, p. 206.

The difficulties continue in v. 14.

v. 14a	מִיָּד שְׂאוֹל אֶפְדֶּם מִמָּוֶת אֲנָאִלִּים
v. 14b	אֲהִי דְבָרֶיךָ מָוֶת אֲהִי קִטְבְּךָ שְׂאוֹל
v. 14c	נָחַם יִסְתֵּר מֵעֵינַי

V. 14 contains many parallelisms. שְׂאוֹל is parallel to מָוֶת 2x, in 14a and b; אֶפְדֶּם is parallel to אֲנָאִלִּים in 14a; דְבָרֶיךָ to קִטְבְּךָ in 14b. There are also two chiasmic structures in 14a and b:

v. 14a	Sheol	first person verb	שְׂאוֹל	אֶפְדֶּם
	Death	first person verb	מָוֶת	אֲנָאִלִּים
V. 14b	particle+object	Death	דְבָרֶיךָ	מָוֶת
	particle+object	Sheol	קִטְבְּךָ	שְׂאוֹל

Sheol and Death are personified here and it is possible to regard Deber and Qeteb also as such. In this case they appear here as the agents of Mot and Sheol, but ultimately they are all Yahweh's agents of punishment. Yahweh is contemplating whether to leave the Israelites in the power of Death or whether to rescue them.⁴³

Yahweh's powers are more comprehensive than any of the other gods' because he is the living god who never dies;⁴⁴ we see both Deber and Qeteb as his agents elsewhere.⁴⁵ Yahweh would have the power to rescue (פָּדָה) or redeem/ransom (גָּאֵל) the people from these sinister forces but chooses not to because of the nature of their guilt. They turned from Yahweh and followed other gods, and this has become the cause of their destruction. We have come full circle to the beginning.

In the context of this passage the four terms, מָוֶת, שְׂאוֹל, דְבָרֶיךָ and קִטְבְּךָ are personified forces of destruction and death; it is in Yahweh's power to use them for his purposes. There is nothing to suggest that any of them would be deities, let alone 'demons'.⁴⁶ It is Yahweh who is ultimately responsible for the decision regarding the ⁴³ The first difficulty lies in whether to take the two verbs in 14a as interrogative or as statements. NIV, KJV, NKJ, LXX understood them as 'I shall ransom/I shall redeem...'. RSV, NJB, Wolff, Hosea, Stuart, Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, rightly chose the interrogative form. The context and especially 14c make it clear that they were meant as poetic questions, Yahweh did not intend to save the Israelites. The form אֲהִי is also difficult. In v. 10 LXX, Vg and Targ attest the interrogative 'where' and the context requires an interrogative here too. For other alternatives see Andersen and Freedman, Hosea, pp. 639-640.

⁴⁴ Hos 2:1; Hab 1:12.

⁴⁵ E.g. Hab 3:5; Deut 32:24; etc.

⁴⁶ Against McKeating, Amos, p. 150 and others (see 2.4 and 2.5).

fate of the Israelites. In this passage that fate is destruction. Vv. 15 and 14: 1 describe the devastation stating once more the cause of it: they rebelled (בָּזְרָתָהּ) against their god, therefore they will be punished. Deber is one of Yahweh's agents of punishment that often occurs personified (see below); here we have Qeteb in parallel with it, therefore a similar meaning for the two words is required. Nothing in this passage indicates that disease, i.e. 'plague' or 'pestilence' is referred to; most translations give 'destruction' for qeteb, which with 'plague' does not really relay the parallelism.⁴⁷ We suggest 'devastation' and 'destruction', a more general translation that points to the result of falling into the power of these agents, which nevertheless captures the nuance of the passage and points out the parallelism between them.

5.2.3 Habakkuk 3: 5

v. 5

לְפָנָיו יִלְךְ דָּבָר וַיֵּצֵא רָשָׁף לְרִגְלָיו:

Habakkuk 3 is entitled 'a prayer of the prophet Habakkuk'; it contains his plea to Yahweh for deliverance.⁴⁸ It is argued that the chapter forms part of the answer to the question asked in ch. 1, 'Why does God allow the wicked to go unpunished?'⁴⁹ The ⁴⁷ Usual translations for deber in this passage are: 'plague(s)' and for qeteb 'destruction' (CJB; JPS; NIV; NJB; RSV). NAU suggests 'thorns' and 'sting', and LXX translates 'punishment' for deber and 'sting' for qeteb. Vg has 'death' for both.

⁴⁸ It is generally recognised that chapter 3 is a difficult text, as F. I. Andersen puts it, 'Almost every word constitutes a problem' (Habakkuk: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB 25 (New York: Doubleday, 2001), p. 268). It is debated whether, because of its distinct literary character and content, the chapter should be regarded as a separate composition from chs 1 and 2, or whether, because of common themes and vocabulary, it should be seen as linked to the rest of the book. The question of the nature of the text is also debated; it has the elements of a hymn, a lament, a song of thanksgiving, a liturgy and a royal psalm, thus it is difficult to classify it by type. For a detailed discussion of these issues see commentaries. For example, R. L. Smith, Micah – Malachi, WBC 32 (Waco: Word Books Publishers, 1984), pp. 94-97; 114-115; P. C. Craigie, The Twelve Prophets (Edinburgh: St. Andrews Press, 1985), II, pp. 101-102; Eszenyei Szeles, pp. 42-44; J. J. M. Roberts, Nahum, Habakkuk, and Zephaniah: A Commentary OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1991), pp. 130-149; M. A. Sweeney, The Twelve Prophets, Berit Olam (Collegeville: The Liturgical Press, 2000), II, pp. 478-481; Andersen, pp. 259-261. For textual issues and a reconstructed text see B. Margulis, 'The Psalm of Habakkuk: A Reconstruction and Interpretation', ZAW 82 (1970), 400-441; also J. H. Eaton, 'The Origin and Meaning of Habakkuk 3', ZAW 76 (1964), 144-171.

⁴⁹ R. Smith, p. 115.

prayer (vv. 2-19a) is framed by a title in v. 1, and a colophon in v. 19b. V. 2 is like an abstract of the chapter, it contains a summary of the whole:⁵⁰

v. 2a the prophet has heard of Yahweh's fame	יְהוָה שָׁמַעְתִּי שְׁמֵעֶךָ
v. 2b is frightened by Yahweh's deeds	יִרְאַתִּי יְהוָה פָּעֲלֶךָ
v. 2c he wishes these would be known at the present time,	בְּקִרְבִּי שָׁנִים חַיִּיהוּ
v. 2d	בְּקִרְבִּי שָׁנִים תּוֹדִיעַ
v. 2e he pleads for mercy	בְּרַגְזֵךָ רַחֵם תִּזְכּוֹר

V. 2a is then expanded in vv. 3-7; the deeds referred to in vv. 2c and 2d are described in detail in vv. 8-15; v.2b is paralleled/expanded in vv. 16a-d, and the plea for mercy in v. 2e is countered with a confession of faith in vv. 16e-19c.⁵¹

In v. 3 the prophet calls God Eloah (אֱלֹהִים)⁵² and Holy One (יְקָדוֹשׁ)⁵³ then proceeds to describe his approach in a theophany.⁵⁴ Sweeney points out that theophanies usually consist of two basic elements; a description of Yahweh's approach and of the consequent 'natural upheaval'. Reactions of fear or awe usually also follow.⁵⁵ The two terms referring to God may also add to the 'awe-inspiring quality of the vision'.⁵⁶ God's glory encompasses heaven and earth (v. 3); his splendour is like the sunrise (v. 4).⁵⁷

⁵⁰ Sweeney refers to the verse as 'the introduction to the psalm' defining its basic concerns (Twelve, pp. 481-482). Andersen, pp. 273-283 provides a detailed analysis of v. 2. See also Eszenyei, pp. 45-46; Roberts, p. 150; Eaton, 'Origin', pp. 146-147; Margulis, pp. 412-414.

⁵¹ The poem is variously translated in future, present or past tense, depending on whether it is taken to be a prediction of Yahweh's coming in the future (LXX) or a reference to past events (RSV; NIV; JPS; Craigie, Twelve, pp. 100-101). Some scholars prefer to use present tense; e.g. Eaton, 'Origin', pp. 144-145, and pp. 164-168 for further discussion on this issue; R. Smith, pp. 112-113 (also NJB); or a mixture, e. g. Roberts, pp. 128-129 (vv. 3-5 present, vv. 6-7 past, etc.). Andersen asserts that 'we can now be confident that all of the core of the poem (vv. 3-15) is intended to be past tense', and points out that this underlines the archaic character of the psalm (p. 264). The present approach is in agreement with Andersen's.

⁵² Mostly in Job (41 out of 57 occurrences) but also in Hab 1:11; Deut 32:15, 17; Pss 18:32, 50:22; Prov 30:5.

⁵³ Isa 31:1.

⁵⁴ Examples of theophanies are: Deut 33:2; Judg 5:4-5; Amos 1:2; Mic 1:3-4; Ezek 1:4-28; Pss 68:8-9(7-8), 97:2-5.

⁵⁵ Twelve, p. 482.

⁵⁶ Roberts, p. 151.

⁵⁷ Roberts argues that although Habakkuk's description of Yahweh's appearance is in more general terms than his appearance on Mount Sinai in the Exodus tradition, i.e. there is no explicit mention of thunder, lightning, clouds, fire and smoke, nevertheless the verbs and nouns that are used here suggest Theophanies are usually associated with military imagery; Yahweh defeats the enemies who threaten his creation or his people (vv. 8-15).⁵⁸ Here too, we have the image of Yahweh as a warrior king surrounded by his attendants.⁵⁹ In v. 5 we read: 'Before him went Deber, and Reshef followed after him.'

The picture that emerges here is that of a warrior god who is mighty, great, and awe-inspiring, but whose power at the same time can bring destruction (vv. 5-7). Like a general inspecting his army, Yahweh stood (עָמַד) and looked (רָאָה), and his presence and gaze shook the earth, made the nations tremble; mountains and hills crumbled and collapsed (v. 6). The following verse suggests that the mountains and hills here represent the enemies who tremble (יָרְזְזוּ) and are in anguish (תַּחַת אֲוֶן) and distress at the sight of Yahweh.

The context that follows is clearly mythological, and this is why many scholars see v. 5 in this light too. The fact that Reshef was a well known Semitic deity would support this supposition.⁶⁰ Since Reshef is a divine name, the parallelism would require that so is Deber. Most scholars take both to be demons that are present with Yahweh to inspire fear. Thus both Caquot and Day opt for this interpretation though they both also say that deber and reshef appear to be personifications of Yahweh's awesome power. Fulco, Xella and Niehr also take reshef here to be a demonised version of the Canaanite god,⁶¹ with Niehr going as far as to claim that Yahweh in this passage has taken over the characteristics of Reshef as war god and protector deity.⁶² Some commentators have argued similarly,⁶³ and some simply mention the similar imagery. Thus the expression קַרְנֵי־מִיָּדוֹ לוֹ, would refer to lightning bolts emerging from his hand, a standard depiction of Near Eastern storm gods (pp. 152-153). F. Andersen suggests a different interpretation, namely that קַרְנֵי־מִיָּדוֹ would be the 'rays' of the sun. This would fit with the reference to sunrise earlier in the verse. However, he warns against reading too much into the sunrise imagery, arguing that 'Poetic comparison of God with the sun is a literary resource, a commonplace, but it is going too far to find behind such language either an original hymn to the sun transferred to Yahweh or traces of an ancient identity of Yahweh and the sun god.' (p. 298)

⁵⁸ Sweeney, Twelve, p. 482.

⁵⁹ R. Smith, p. 116; F. Andersen, p. 303. The verbs יָלַד and יִצֵּא have military connotations (F. Andersen, p. 307).

⁶⁰ See 2.6.

⁶¹ See 2.6.5.

⁶² Similarly J. C. de Moor, The Rise of Yahwism: The Roots of Israelite Monotheism (Leuven: Leuven University Press, 1990) argues that Yahweh has taken over the function of Baal here (p. 134).

⁶³ Eszenyei recognises the personification of deber and reshef but takes these 'heralds' or 'envoys' to refer 'back to the demonic forces in the ancient Canaanite religion, to the power of those horrible mythological reference.⁶⁴ F. Andersen's discussion of verse 5 is especially interesting. He notes that in vv. 3-7 'there is still a high level of mythology or at least a marked use of mythopoeic imagery', and thus v. 5 which is a 'key verse', can be either taken as 'virtually polytheistic' with Deber and Reshef as real beings, or as 'merely poetic', with Deber and Reshef as 'personifications of features of God's destructive power.'⁶⁵ Andersen draws attention to the similarities with Deut 33:2, another description of a theophany, where he argues that we have the image of the deity 'accompanied by the four prime attendants', four destroyers.⁶⁶ He suggests that in Hab 3: 5 too, we have Yahweh surrounded by 'four quasi-divine beings' (p. 306). Sometimes there is only one destroyer mentioned, in which case it is deber (Exod 9:3, 15; Num 14:12, etc.); in other instances there are two (deber and hereb, Exod 5:3; Ezek 28:23; Amos 4:10; or hereb and ra'ab, Jer 14:15) or three (commonly deber, hereb and ra'ab, e.g. Lev 26:25; 2 Sam 24:13; 2 Chron 20:9, Jer and Ezek passages⁶⁷). He suggests that 'originally Yahweh's bodyguard consisted of four "holy ones": Sword, Famine, Pestilence, and Plague' with reshef occurring less frequently perhaps because of his clear Canaanite association. 'Perhaps ršp was lost early from the list because it was more obviously a Canaanite god than the others. The other three survived in the stereotyped lists of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, by whose time the old mythology could be used without danger of polytheism.'⁶⁸ Andersen conjectures that 'we can only guess at what the four may have been in the ancient poems whose fragments survive in Deuteronomy 33 and Habakkuk 3', as unlike divinities that oppressed mortal human beings with epidemics or with destructive droughts.' According to her the prophet sees them as 'horrible demons' that 'have no independent sphere of influence but are inferior beings who stand to serve Yahweh...' (p. 48) Similarly Eaton believes Reshef to be the 'demonic escort' of Yahweh. To the contrary, J. D. W. Watts, The Books of Joel, Obadiah, Jonah, Nahum, Habakkuk and Zephaniah (Cambridge: University Press, 1975) does not think it likely that deber and reshef would be Yahweh's attendants; rather their moving before and behind is scurrying away 'like small animals or insects which scatter at a man's approach' (p. 147).

⁶⁴ R. Smith, pp. 114/5a, 116; Sweeney, Twelve, p. 484. Margulis notes that real terms, e.g. Teman, Paran, 'heads' or 'bow', etc. mix with 'mythic personages' such as Reshef or Yam (p. 437). It is interesting that in his detailed analyses of the text he does not deal with v. 5.

⁶⁵ P. 285. It is unclear which option Andersen prefers. However, there is an excellent and very detailed discussion of the poetics of the verse as well as the ancient Near Eastern parallels to it (pp. 285-307).

⁶⁶ P. 300. However, his attempt to find deber in Deut 33:3 is a little forced.

⁶⁷ See below 5.3, 5.4, 5.5.3, and 5.5.6.

⁶⁸ Pp. 305-306. Thus, Andersen argues further, Ezekiel's fourth destroyer became the 'wild animals', and Deut 32:24 uses 'natural dangers' instead of 'names of old gods'.

reshef, hereb, ra'ab or deber 'are not attested as Canaanite deities' (p.306). He seems to suggest that since Deber and Reshef are clearly identified in Hab 3:5, the term qarnayim, 'horned ones', might be a reference to the other two. Andersen's suggestion is attractive and better suited to the context than that of those who see Reshef and Deber as 'demons'. Both Reshef and Deber appear here as members of Yahweh's retinue, their function is to emphasise Yahweh's awesome power; there is nothing to suggest that they should be regarded as demons. However, we argue that it is unnecessary to try and identify hereb and ra'ab behind the qarnayim as Andersen does. There are not necessarily four attendants in Yahweh's retinue as Andersen has also recognised (pp. 301-302). There can be one, two, three, four, seven or myriads of scourges, arrows, angels/beings (bringers) of evil or holy ones who are always in the service of Yahweh.⁶⁹ The parallelism with Deut 33:2-3 suggests that Deber and Reshef in Hab 3:5 are members of Yahweh's myriads of qedosim.

The mythological elements continue in the following verses, vv. 8-15 allude to creation and God's conflict with his enemies. These enemies here are represented by the 'deep' (תְּהוֹמוֹת, v. 10), the 'waters' (מַיִם, vv. 10, 15), 'rivers' (נְהַרִּים, vv. 8, 9), 'sea' (יָם, vv. 8, 15) or 'the nations' (גּוֹיִם, v. 12; יְגוֹרְנוּ עִם, v. 16). Yahweh appears in his role as a warrior here too. The reason of his coming is to defeat his enemies.

The prophet's response to God's coming and work is initially fear (v. 16a-d) which is then changed to faith (vv. 16e-19). The answer to the opening question, 'Why does God allow the wicked to go unpunished?' is given in v. 16e through the prophet's affirmation of his conviction that the day (the day of calamity, יוֹם צָרָה) will come when Yahweh will strike down the people who are coming to attack (לְעֵלוֹת לְעַם יְגוֹרְנוּ).

5.2.4 Summary of deber in Hab 3; Hos 13 and Ps 91

Many scholars take these three passages as pointing to a mythological background of the Hebrew Bible. Indeed the Hebrew Bible frequently uses mythological motifs such as God's struggle with the chaos monster, variously identified as tehom, deep, rahab, yam, the sea, tannin, the monster, the dragon, etc.; or thunder as the voice of God (Ps 29, e); the stars as armies of the Lord; Death personified (Isa 28:15; Ps 49:15); the mountain of the gods (Isa 14:13; Ps 48:3); etc. Thus the three passages discussed above also ‘gather(s) together images applied to the Lord which recall mythical associations.’⁷⁰ However, only Hab 3 has clear mythological elements. A word of caution is also needed here. Schökel points out that although there are mythical motifs in it, the Hebrew Bible clearly ‘has not admitted myths’ (‘if we take as models the undoubtedly mythological texts of the ancient NE’, p.18). He writes (p. 19):

⁶⁹ See following sections below.

J. Blair 5. Deber

The literature of the OT is a developed literature, the result of a long and stable tradition. It is open to foreign influences and well-used to elaborating and re-elaborating earlier or foreign material. For this reason mixed genres are frequent, and many works resist tidy classification. This is why the study of motifs which can transfer to different genres may be just as important as the study of literary genres. And what happens with the myths happens also with folk tales.

Mythological motifs as well as personification and metaphor are poetical devices which the Hebrew poets used frequently and with great art in the Hebrew Bible.⁷¹ We should be cautious in drawing conclusions without considering this fact.⁷²

In Ps 91 deber appears as one of the personified dangerous forces that cause death and destruction at the command of Yahweh; the others are the Fowler, Qeteb, the Arrow and Terror, all presented as Yahweh’s angels, an array of powerful warriors. Similarly in Hos 13, it appears along with Mot, Sheol and Qeteb as personified forces of destruction and death whom Yahweh uses for his purposes. They are his agents of punishment. In Hab 3 both Reshef and Deber are members of Yahweh’s retinue, their function is to emphasise Yahweh’s awesome power.

Clearly in these passages deber appears in a personified sense but there is nothing to suggest that it should be regarded as a ‘demon’.

5.3 Deber in Jeremiah

דֵּבֶר occurs 17 times in the Book of Jeremiah, in the following passages: 14:12; 21: 6, 7, 9; 24:10; 27:8, 13; 28:8; 29:17, 18; 32:24, 36; 34:17; 38:2; 42:17, 22 and 44:13. We shall now turn to examine these.

⁷⁰ Alonso, p. 18.

⁷¹ Alonso, pp. 17-19; 123-125; G. B. Caird, The Language and Imagery of the Bible (London: Duckworth, 1980), pp. 219-242. He argues that ‘myth is a specialised kind of metaphor’ (p. 220). W. Watson, Classical Hebrew Poetry.

⁷² See for ex. the remarks of H. Barstad, ‘Sheol’, in DDD, pp. 768-770.

5.3.1 Jeremiah 14: 12

v.12

כִּי יִצְמוּ אֵינֹנֵי שְׁמֵעַ אֶל־רִנָּתָם וְכִי יַעֲלוּ עֲלֶיהָ וּמִנְחָה אֵינֹנֵי רָצָם כִּי בַחֲרָב וּבַרְעָב
וּבַדָּבָר אֲנֹכִי מִכֶּלֶה אוֹתָם:

Deber occurs in Jer 14:12 in a triad together with ‘sword’ and ‘famine’.

Most scholars take Jer 14:2-15:9 as a unit,⁷³ and within this 14:10-16 as a prose piece consisting of two judgement oracles (v. 10 and vv. 15-16) and a dialogue between Yahweh and the prophet (vv. 11-14).⁷⁴

The two poems in vv. 2-9 and vv. 17- 22 contain a lament (vv. 2-6 // 17-19b), a confession of the people and supplication for deliverance (vv. 7-9 // 19c-22), and are followed by a response from Yahweh.⁷⁵ This is not the expected announcement of deliverance but instead, of judgement.⁷⁶

In v. 7 the people confess their iniquities (עוֹן) and to the fact that they have sinned (חָטָא) against Yahweh.⁷⁷ These same words are repeated in v. 10 in reply to the ⁷³ For example J. A. Thompson, The Book of Jeremiah (Grand Rapids: W. B. Eerdmans, 1980), p. 375; R. E. Clements, Jeremiah, Interpretation: Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1988), p. 89; P. C. Craigie, P. H. Kelley and J. F. Drinkard, Jr, Jeremiah 1-25, WBC 26 (Dallas: Word Books Publisher, 1991), p. 195. Lundbom regards 14:2 -15:3 as a shorter unit. See Jeremiah 1-20, AB 21A (New York: Doubleday, 1999), p. 692. W. Holladay argues most convincingly for the unity of 14:2-15:9, and there is an excellent summary of different scholarly views. See W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah 1: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Jeremiah Chapters 1-25, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1986), pp. 421-422. J. Bright and others (e.g. Skinner, for reference see Holladay, pp. 421-422) regard the text as a collection of separate oracles. See J. Bright, Jeremiah: Introduction, Translation, and Notes, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965), p. 103. R. P. Carroll, Jeremiah: A Commentary (Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1986) argues that the section is composed of ‘a number of discrete units’ (p. 307). See also W. McKane, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on Jeremiah: Introduction and Commentary on Jeremiah 1-25 (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1986), I, pp. 315-343.

⁷⁴ There is disagreement regarding v. 10. According to some (e.g. Bright, McKane, Jeremiah 1-25; Holladay, Jeremiah 1; Lundbom, Jeremiah 1-20, Thompson, Jeremiah, also NIV and RSV) it is poetry whereas others take it as prose (e.g. Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, NJB). However, vv. 11-16 are clearly prose.

⁷⁵ Holladay, Jeremiah 1, points out close links between 14:2-6; 14:17-18 and 15:5-9; then 14:7-9 and 14:19-22; as well as 14:10 and 15:1- 4 (p. 423).

⁷⁶ Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 200; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, p. 426.

⁷⁷ The acknowledgement of their sins is introduced by כִּי, and Holladay argues that this should be taken in the sense of ‘so’ here, rather than the usual ‘for’ (Jeremiah 1, p. 432). The context supports Holladay’s suggestion.

people's plea for forgiveness.⁷⁸ Yahweh remembers these iniquities (עוֹן) and sins (חַטָּא) and because of them he does not accept the people (lit. 'he is not pleased', לֹא רָצָה) or their plea. The promised severe punishment reflects the gravity of the people's 'iniquities' and 'sins'; their love for wandering and lack of restraint (אָהַבּוּ לָנוּעַ רַגְלֵיהֶם לֹא חָשְׁבוּ), must allude to their wandering after foreign gods.⁷⁹ This is confirmed later in v. 20 in another confession of sins. The people acknowledge 'our wickedness' (רָשָׁעֵנוּ); 'the sins of our fathers' (עוֹן אֲבוֹתֵינוּ) and that 'we have indeed sinned against you' (כִּי חָטָאנוּ לָךְ).⁸⁰ The use of the same words (עוֹן and חַטָּא) connects this verse with vv. 7 and 10.

The context of this announcement of punishment is perhaps a failed attempt of Jeremiah for intercession, because vv. 11 and 12 emphatically declare: 'do not pray on behalf of this people, for their benefit.' Yahweh forbids any attempt of the prophet to intercede on behalf of the people and at the same time declares his resolve to disregard the peoples' attempts to please him. Their confession and their cry will not be heard; their offerings will not be accepted. The expression 'I will not approve them' (אֵינְנִי רֹצֵם), picks up from v. 10 (לֹא רָצָם) and thus carries the same idea of rejection of the people by Yahweh.⁸¹ Turning from Yahweh to follow other gods (v. 22) is the ultimate sin against him, and therefore the punishment is complete destruction brought about by the 'sword', 'famine' and deber, 'for I shall destroy (finish) them through the sword, and through the famine and through the deber', כִּי בַחֶרֶב וּבְרָעָב וּבְדָבָר אֲנֹכִי מְכַלֶּה אוֹתָם (v. 12).

Commentators argue that this is a reference to war and its aftermath; famine and plague often followed in the footsteps of wars in ancient times.⁸² Thus a translation of deber as 'plague' is possible but not certain. Bright's translation as 'disease' is ⁷⁸ The similarities of this verse with Hos 8:13 led some scholars to suggest that it was added from Hosea (Janzen, quoted in McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, p. 321 and Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 198) or that Jeremiah quoted Hosea (McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, p. 321).

⁷⁹ Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 382; Lundbom, Jeremiah 1-20, pp. 705-706.

⁸⁰ כִּי is used in a similar sense as in v. 7. With Holladay, Jeremiah 1, p. 438.

⁸¹ Holladay, Jeremiah 1, p. 434.

⁸² Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 382. Lundbom, Jeremiah 1-20, refers to the expression 'pestilence and famine' (loimon kai limon) found in Plutarch's de Iside, p. 390, and Thucydides' description of a plague during the Peloponnesian war in Athens (p. 707).

preferable.⁸³ ‘Sword’ and ‘famine’ appear again together three times, once in v. 13 and twice in v. 15, this time without the third element.⁸⁴ The false prophets, who prophesy against the ‘sword and famine’, will perish by the same ‘sword and famine’ (v. 15). Holladay points out that two different stems of the verb ‘to prophesy’ (נבא) are used in v. 14, the Niphal and the Hithpael, and suggests that perhaps this was deliberately done by Jeremiah to achieve a ‘derogatory’ sense for the false prophets’ actions as in earlier usage ‘the hitpa‘el stem of the verb can mean “rave” (1 Sam 18:10)’.⁸⁵

The passage in 15:1-3 is interesting. V. 1 picks up the theme of intercession with a reference to Moses and Samuel. Even these two great prophets would not be able to save the people from punishment.⁸⁶ Their sins are so great that nothing and no one can save them. Yahweh sends the people away from his sight, ‘send them away from my presence and let them go’ (שְׁלַח מֵעַל-פְּנֵי וַיִּצְאוּ). It is noted that the use of the expression here is an ironic reversal of the exodus event.⁸⁷ There Moses was demanding in the name of Yahweh that pharaoh ‘let my people go’ (שְׁלַח אֶת-עַמִּי).⁸⁸ Here Jeremiah is told to send the people away from Yahweh, to let them go to their doom. In v. 2 the people are allotted (given over) to death, sword, famine and captivity as punishment. This verse is in poetry.

Those for death to death	אֲשֶׁר לַמָּוֶת לַמָּוֶת
and those for the sword to the sword	וְאֲשֶׁר לַחֶרֶב לַחֶרֶב
and those for the famine to the famine	וְאֲשֶׁר לָרָעַב לָרָעַב
and those for the captivity to the captivity	וְאֲשֶׁר לַשְּׁבִי לַשְּׁבִי

It is argued by some that ‘death’ here is a substitute for deber. For example Holladay writes: ‘The parallel in 14:12 has “sword, famine and pestilence,” and it is clear that “death” here is a poetic synonym for “pestilence”.’⁸⁹ Similarly McKane argues that ⁸³ P. 103. CJB also translates ‘war, famine and disease’. LXX has θάνατος, ‘death’ for deber; so does Targ. Vg has peste, ‘pestilence’.

⁸⁴ On the pair ‘sword’ and ‘famine’ see the comments of Holladay in Jeremiah 1, p. 435.

⁸⁵ Jeremiah 1, p. 435.

⁸⁶ Cf. Moses’ intercession in Exod 32:11-13; 20-34; Num 14:13-19; Samuel’s in 1 Sam 7:9; 12:19-25.

⁸⁷ Holladay, Jeremiah 1, pp. 439- 440; Carroll, p. 320.

⁸⁸ Exod 5:1; 7:16, 26; 8:16; 9:1, 13; 10:3.

⁸⁹ Jeremiah 1, p. 440. Also Lundbom, Jeremiah 1-20, p. 719.

‘the view that מוֹת is a synonym of דְּבַר is certainly correct.’⁹⁰ Carroll simply translates מוֹת by ‘pestilence’ but does not explain his choice.⁹¹ The suggestion seems plausible as there are other examples of מוֹת occurring together with famine and/or sword, e.g. in Jeremiah 18:21 and 43:11.⁹² Also the fact that LXX and Targ translate deber as ‘death’ would seem to support such suggestion. However, there is nothing in the context of Jeremiah 18:21 that would justify an exchange of מוֹת for דְּבַר, only that there is ‘sword’ and ‘famine’ in the same verse (but they do not appear as a triad but separately, and ‘sword’ occurs twice). However the pair ‘sword and famine’ appear elsewhere without a third element.⁹³ Jer 43:11 gives even less support; ‘famine’ is missing from there, but we have ‘captivity’ as the third element with ‘death’ and ‘sword’. LXX and Targ translate deber as ‘death’ throughout the books of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, thus they cannot be used to justify the exchange here.

While some commentators argue that the fourth element seems out of place (as the first three are seen as ‘alternative forms of death’, while the fourth one is not), and thus see the last cola as secondary,⁹⁴ others rightly point out that there is no support in the MT for such a claim.⁹⁵ Indeed, regardless of whether the suggestion to substitute deber for mawet is correct (and as we have seen such is unfounded), the verse makes sense in the wider context of Jeremiah’s message regarding the fate of the people of Jerusalem: death or captivity. We shall see in later chapters that the people are told repeatedly that Jerusalem is doomed, that it is against Yahweh’s will to stay there, therefore those who disobey him will be punished by death. Those who obey, while still punished by being taken into captivity, at least have the hope of survival. V. 2 looks forward to this message.

⁹⁰ Jeremiah 1-25, p. 335.

⁹¹ Pp. 319-320. Similarly Thompson, Jeremiah, uses the two words interchangeably (pp. 385 and 387).

⁹² Some modern versions seem to presume an identification of מוֹת and דְּבַר. For example in Jer 18:21 the phrase וְאִנְשֵׁיהֶם יְהִי הָרְגִי מוֹת is translated by CJB as ‘let their husbands be slain by disease’; by NJB as: ‘let their husbands die of plague’; and by RSV as: ‘May their men meet death by pestilence’. In Jer 43:11 in the phrase אֲשֶׁר לַמָּוֶת לַמָּוֶת ‘death’ is translated as ‘plague’ by NJB and as ‘pestilence’ by RSV, but CJB has ‘death’.

⁹³ E.g. Jer 5:12; 11:22; 42:16; 44:18, 27; Job 5:20; Isa 51:19; Lam 4:9; etc.

⁹⁴ For this reason Holladay, Jeremiah 1, regards the last cola as a secondary addition (p. 440). Carroll argues for deuteronomistic motifs introduced by a later editor throughout (pp. 307-321). Similarly McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, p. 335.

⁹⁵ Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 204; Lundbom, Jeremiah 1-20, p. 719.

V. 3 is linked to the previous verse by the common element ‘sword’ and the mention of four forms of punishment. However, rather than expanding on the whole verse it focuses on the consequences of death. The four מִשְׁפָּחוֹת are usually translated as ‘destroyers’,⁹⁶ ‘families’,⁹⁷ or ‘scourges’.⁹⁸ Holladay notes that the use of this word in the sense of ‘kinds of destroyers’ is unique in the Hebrew Bible, but that it does occur in the sense of ‘species of animals’ in Gen 8:19. Clearly, the latter could not be the sense here as the fourth element is not a kind of animal but ‘the sword’. The word also carries the sense of punishment. These four ‘things’ referred to are Yahweh’s agents who carry out the punishment,⁹⁹ which is even worse than death because it suggests the refusal of proper burial which was feared by the ancients.¹⁰⁰

The personification of the three elements deber, famine and sword is possible here especially if the preposition בְּ is taken instrumentally; ‘through’ them Yahweh destroys.¹⁰¹ Similarly Death, Sword, Famine and Captivity in 15:2 are abstract nouns personified to convey the prophet’s message more emphatically.

5.3.2 Jeremiah 21: 6, 7 and 9

vv. 6-7

וְהַכִּיתִי אֶת־יוֹשְׁבֵי הָעִיר הַזֹּאת וְאֶת־הָאָדָם וְאֶת־הַבְּהֵמָה בְּדָבָר גָּדוֹל יָמְתוּ:
 וְאַחֲרֵי־כֵן נֹאֵם־יְהוָה אֲתָן אֶת־צַדִּיקֶיהוּ מִלֶּדְיָהוּדָה וְאֶת־עַבְדָּיו וְאֶת־הָעָם
 וְאֶת־הַנְּשֹׂאִים בְּעִיר הַזֹּאת מִן־הַדָּבָר מִן־הַחֶרֶב וּמִן־הָרֶעֶב בְּיַד נְבוּכַדְרֶאֱצַר
 מִלֶּדְבָבָל וּבְיַד אִיבֵיהֶם וּבְיַד מְבַקְשֵׁי נַפְשָׁם וְהָפֵם לְפִי־חֶרֶב לֹא־יָחוּס עֲלֵיהֶם וְלֹא יַחְמַל וְלֹא יִרְחָם:

v. 9

הַיֹּשֵׁב בְּעִיר הַזֹּאת יָמוּת בַּחֶרֶב וּבְרֶעֶב וּבְדָבָר וְהַיּוֹצֵא וְנָפַל עַל־הַכְּפָשִׁים
 הַצָּרִים עֲלֵיכֶם (יַחֲיֶה) [וְיַחֲיֶה] וְהָיְתָה־לוֹ נַפְשׁוֹ לְשָׁלָל:

⁹⁶ E.g. NIV; RSV; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 197; Carroll, p. 319; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, ‘kinds of destroyers’ (p. 421).

⁹⁷ Lundbom, Jeremiah 1-20, p. 718; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, refer to Giesebrecht and Volz (p. 204).

⁹⁸ CJB. NJB has ‘four kinds of thing’; JPS has ‘four kinds’.

⁹⁹ Elsewhere we have reference to Yahweh’s four ‘scourges’ or ‘arrows’. Animals and birds are agents of Yahweh in Num 21:6; Deut 32: 24; Jer 8:17; Hos 13:7-8.

¹⁰⁰ Often a theme in Jeremiah; e.g. 7:33; 8:2; 9:21; 16:3-4, 6; 19:7; 22:18-18. Also in Deut 28:26; Gen 40:19; 1 Sam 17:44-46; 1 Kgs 14:11; 16:4; Isa 18:6; Ezek 39:17-20; Ps 79:1-3. See also ch. 4 n. 29 p. 75. A similar curse is found in the vassal treaties of Esarhaddon. See ANET, pp. 534-541.

¹⁰¹ See Jer 21 in 5.3.2 below.

Deber occurs three times in this chapter, once on its own and twice in the triad but in varying order.¹⁰² The context is that of judgement; chapters 21-23 contain judgement oracles, both in prose and poetry, against the monarchy and false prophets. It is generally agreed that Jer 21:1-10 is a section in prose.¹⁰³ V. 1 is an introduction; Yahweh speaks to Jeremiah in response to King Zedekiah's request. The siege of Jerusalem is about to occur, so the king sends two messengers, Pashhur and Zephaniah to Jeremiah asking him to enquire about Yahweh's intention.¹⁰⁴ The verb in v. 2, דָּרַשׁ, is used with the emphatic particle, אֵינִי, making the king's plea more forceful. This verb is a technical term referring to seeking the deity in a divine oracle,¹⁰⁵ but here the second part of v. 2 makes it clear that the king is asking for Jeremiah's intercession with Yahweh. It is not the deity's intention the king wants to enquire about but he is hoping for Yahweh's miraculous deliverance, as in past times.¹⁰⁶

Vv. 3-4 relay Yahweh's answer to Zedekiah through Jeremiah. This is not what the king would have hoped for. Instead of turning back the enemy (וַיַּעַלְהֶם מִצֵּלְיָנָם) Yahweh will cause their own weapons to turn (Hi of סָבַב) against them. Craigie, Kelley and Drinkard note that v. 4 can be read ambiguously, even the preposition אֶל carries a double possibility, it can be interpreted either 'to' or 'against' Zedekiah. Further the use of סָבַב also carries ambiguities.¹⁰⁷ Whether v. 4 is intentionally ¹⁰² V. 6 has דָּבַר, v. 7a has דָּבַר חָרַב and רָעַב; then v. 7b has חָרַב again, and v. 9 has רָעַב חָרַב, חָרַב and דָּבַר.

¹⁰³ Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 466; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, pp. 283-289; J. R. Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, AB 21B (New York: Doubleday, 2004), pp. 94-107; Carroll, p. 404; McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, pp. 491-496; Bright, p. 217. Holladay, Jeremiah 1, writes: 'The passage offers itself as an oracle, ... but it is in effect a simple narrative...' (p. 569). There is disagreement amongst commentators as to whether vv. 1-10 form a unity or not. For various treatments of this section see commentaries.

¹⁰⁴ For a discussion of the identity of Pashhur and Zephaniah see commentaries n. 103 above.

¹⁰⁵ E.g. Gen 25:22; Exod 18:15; Deut 4:29; 12:5; 1 Sam 9:9; 1 Kgs 22:5, 7-8; 2 Kgs 3:11; 8:8; 22:13; Isa 31:1; 55:6; 65:10; Hos 10:12; Amos 5:4-6; etc.

¹⁰⁶ Exod 34:10; Pss 40:6(5); 72:18; 78:4; 86:10; 96:3. Commentators note that most probably Zedekiah was referring to the successful intercession of Isaiah at the time of the Assyrian siege (by Sennacherib), cf. 2 Kgs 19:35-36; Isa 37:36-37. See Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 467; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 285; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 100; McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, p. 496; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, p. 571.

¹⁰⁷ Pp. 286-287. Also Holladay, Jeremiah 1, p. 571. He also notes the unique use of the Hiphil form of the verb סָבַב in the HB in the sense of reversing the direction of weapons.

ambiguous or not, the following clearly cannot be taken in a positive sense. In v. 5 Yahweh declares that he himself is going to fight against king and people. The use of the personal pronoun with the verb (וְנִלְחַמְתִּי אֲנִי), emphasizes the gravity of the situation. Yahweh is described as the mighty Divine Warrior, fighting with ‘outstretched hand and with strong arm’ (בְּיָד נְטוּיָה וּבְזְרוּעַ חֲזָקָה), but here his role is reversed, and this is already anticipated by the reversal of the weapons in the previous verse.¹⁰⁸ The picture is further intensified with the use of three nouns, אַף, חַמָּה, and קֶצֶף גָּדוֹל, ‘anger’, ‘fury’ and ‘great wrath’. These nouns have the preposition בְּ, and they are usually translated ‘in anger’, ‘in fury’ and ‘in great wrath’. However, it is possible to take בְּ as indicating instrumentality,¹⁰⁹ Yahweh fighting with/through anger, fury and great wrath. Thus these abstract nouns appear personified as Yahweh’s warriors fighting alongside him, Anger, Fury and Great Wrath, carrying out his punishment. These are in fact Yahweh’s agents named in vv. 6 and 7; קֶצֶף גָּדוֹל appearing as דָּבָר גָּדוֹל in v. 6, and אַף and חַמָּה respectively as Sword and Famine in v. 7. Yahweh will strike down the inhabitants of the city with/through deber.¹¹⁰ The verb ‘strike down’, נָכָה, usually carries the connotation of smiting to kill or destroy.¹¹¹ This, and the verb מָתוּ in one sentence emphasize the completeness of Yahweh’s judgement; he means to bring total destruction to Jerusalem. V. 7 expands on this judgement, referring perhaps to events after the siege while vv. 5-6 referred to the time of the siege. The king, his officials and the people, survivors of Deber, Sword and Famine, are handed over to Nebuchadrezzar who will show no mercy, pity or compassion.

¹⁰⁸ Commentators note that this expression might go back to the holy war ideology, but there it is usually ‘with strong hand and with outstretched arm’ (cf. Deut 4:34; 5:15; 7:19; 11:2; 26:8; 1 Kg 8:42; 2 Kg 17:36; etc.). The inverted use by Jeremiah signifies judgment not deliverance. See McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, pp. 498-499; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, pp. 571-572; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 102; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 287; J. A. Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 468.

¹⁰⁹ Cf. 1 Kg 22:28 (Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, p. 287).

¹¹⁰ Whatever deber means, it is another instrument of Yahweh, taking בְּ instrumentally as in the previous verse. It is meant to be deadly; both humans and animals shall die by it (בְּדָבָר גָּדוֹל מָתוּ). Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, notes that the expression ‘human and beast’ is common in Jeremiah prose, e.g. 7:20; 21:6; 27:5; 31:27; 32:43; 33:10, 12; 36:29; 51:62 (pp. 103; 312).

¹¹¹ Gen 4:15; Exod 12:12; 1 Sam 23:2; Jer 26:23; Amos 3:15; etc.

The accumulation of nouns is noteworthy;¹¹² no doubt it creates a vivid picture and emphasizes the severity of judgement. There are many parallels between v. 6 and 7. The Babylonian king will strike the survivors down (נִכְרַח). The same verb is used as in v. 6. There the subject was Yahweh, here it is Nebuchadrezzar; in v. 6 Yahweh's instrument was deber, here the king's instrument is the sword (lit. the mouth of the sword), which is usually Yahweh's instrument. The result is the same. Both deber and sword bring death.

The oracle in vv. 8-10 is addressed to the people.¹¹³ It is similar to the oracle conveyed to the king's messengers in that it foretells the destruction of Jerusalem and all those who remain there by sword, famine, and deber. It is also different because here there is a possibility of survival; Yahweh offers the way of life and the way of death. Staying in the city means disobeying Yahweh, it brings death. Going out and surrendering means obeying Yahweh and thus surviving. This possibility was not given in 14:12; there even repentance could not save the people from judgement.

From the discussion above we can conclude that the usual translation of deber as 'plague/pestilence'¹¹⁴ is possible as the context is that of war/siege, but it is not certain. Deber, Sword and Famine appear in parallel with Wrath, Anger and Fury as Yahweh's agents, personifications of his great wrath.¹¹⁵ This is supported by the portrayal of Yahweh as the Divine Warrior.

¹¹² Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 468, notes the characteristic use of nouns in threes, which however leaves us with the problem noted by Craigie, Kelley and Drinkard (p. 288) along with other commentators (McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, pp. 500-501; Carroll, p. 409) that the wording of v. 7 seems superfluous. In fact, v. 7 is an expansion and explanation of v. 6 (see above), and it does not need changed. Holladay (Jeremiah 1, p. 572) explains Yahweh's judgement as a twofold punishment, first by deber and then by sword. Lundbom (Jeremiah 21-36, p. 96) notes that v. 7 has an abb'a' structure (4 terms/3 terms/3 terms/4 terms).

¹¹³ Commentators note the similarity to Jer 38:2-3.

¹¹⁴ Commentaries (see n. 99 above) as well as modern Bible versions and Vg. LXX and Targ have 'death' in v. 6 and 7, and LXX misses the word out in v. 9.

¹¹⁵ Against McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, who argues that deber in v. 6 is merely one of Yahweh's 'defensive weapons', and that בְּדֶבֶר נְדוּל יִמְתּוּ is rather an allusion to 2 Kgs 25:1-4. In his opinion the phrase 'does not contribute to the original sense of vv. 4-6' (p. 500).

5.3.3 Jeremiah 24:10

v.10
וְשַׁלַּחְתִּי בָּם אֶת־הַחֶרֶב אֶת־הָרָעָב וְאֶת־הַדָּבָר עַד־תִּמָּם מִעַל הָאָדָמָה
אֲשֶׁר־נָתַתִּי לָהֶם וְלֹא־אֲבוֹתֵיהֶם :

Jeremiah 24:1-10 is another prose passage.¹¹⁶ It contains Jeremiah's vision of two fig baskets.¹¹⁷ One contains good figs and the other bad figs, which cannot be eaten.

Yahweh's explanation of the meaning of the two baskets reminds us of the oracle in chapter 21:8-10.¹¹⁸ The basket of good figs represents the people who are in exile in Babylon, those who chose life in 21:9. The basket containing the bad figs represents those who disobey Yahweh and choose to stay in Jerusalem or flee to Egypt thus hoping to survive. Their hoped for survival in fact means the opposite, their disobedience will bring punishment on them. In v. 10 Yahweh sends (וְשַׁלַּחְתִּי) his agents of destruction, sword, famine and deber (אֶת־הַחֶרֶב אֶת־הָרָעָב וְאֶת־הַדָּבָר); appearing in the same order as in 21:9. The verb is the same as when Yahweh 'sends' his messengers (angels), and although the three nouns have the object-marker, אֶת, it is possible to take the triad as personified agents of Yahweh.

Beside this triad commentators note the accumulation of several terms frequently found in Jeremiah to describe Judah's imminent doom.¹¹⁹

Regarding the translation of the term deber we can draw similar conclusions as in the previous chapter.¹²⁰

¹¹⁶ On the difficulties of interpreting this passage see e.g. McKane, Jeremiah 1-25, pp. 605-617; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, pp. 654-660; Carroll, pp. 482-488; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, pp. 357-361.

¹¹⁷ Other examples of 'vision reports' are Jer 1:11-12; 1:13-16 in which Yahweh is in dialogue with the prophet (Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 223; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, p. 656).

¹¹⁸ Carroll, p. 482. Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard note similarities with ch. 18 in terms of form, as well as with Amos 7-8 (p. 357).

¹¹⁹ E.g. Jer 19:8; 25:9, 11, 18; 29:18; 42:18; 44:6, 8, 12, 22; etc. Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 509; Craigie, Kelley & Drinkard, Jeremiah 1-25, pp. 360-361; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, pp. 234-235; Holladay, Jeremiah 1, pp. 659-660.

¹²⁰ Usual translation for deber is 'plague/pestilence'; so commentaries and modern Bible versions. LXX and Targ have 'death' here, and LXX changes the order of the words, it has 'famine, death and sword'. Probably not relevant.

5.3.4 Jeremiah 27:8, 13 and 28: 8

Jer 27:8

וְהָיָה הַגּוֹי וְהַמְּמַלְכָה אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יַעֲבְדוּ אֶת־נְבוּכַדְנֶאֱצַר מֶלֶךְ־בָּבֶל וְאֵת אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יִתֵּן אֶת־צְנֹאָרוֹ בְּעַל מֶלֶךְ בָּבֶל בַּחֲרֹב וּבְרָעַב וּבְדָבָר אֲפָקֵד עַל־הַגּוֹי הַהוּא נְאֻם־יְהוָה עַד־תָּמִי אַתֶּם בְּיָדוֹ:

v.13

לָמָּה תִּמְוֹתוּ אֶתְּהָ וְעַמְּךָ בַּחֲרֹב בְּרָעַב וּבְדָבָר כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְהוָה אֶל־הַגּוֹי אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יַעֲבֹד אֶת־מֶלֶךְ בָּבֶל:

Chapters 27 and 28 are generally taken together, and some commentators also include chapters 24 and 29 to form a unit.¹²¹ These prose narratives reflect Jeremiah's conflict with the false prophets centring on the prediction of a positive outcome of the exile in 597 BC. Yahweh's message is that all people should simply submit to Nebuchadrezzar because that is Yahweh's will. God's authority is stressed by listing a number of his titles (יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל), the emphatic use of the personal pronoun אֲנֹכִי as well as the recounting of his mighty acts of creation in vv. 4-5.¹²²

'It is I who have made the earth, and humankind and the beasts that are on the face of the earth...'.¹²³ Yahweh, the creator of everything has the authority to do with his creation as he pleases. Presently he chooses to give all the lands into the Babylonian king's hands. V. 6 using the same emphatic personal pronoun אֲנֹכִי stresses that Nabuchadrezzar's present success is from Yahweh, 'And now it is I who have given ¹²¹ Thus G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise & T. G. Smothers, Jeremiah 26-52, WBC 27 (Dallas: Word Books, 1995), pp. 38-59; Bright also holds that chs 27 and 28 should be read together although he regards them as being 'of different literary types' (p. 201). To the contrary, Carroll holds that chs 27 and 28 are 'doublets' and should be read as parallel accounts (p. 530). Holladay, Jeremiah 2: A Commentary of the Prophet Jeremiah: Chapters 26-52 (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1989), p. 114, and Thompson, Jeremiah, pp. 528- 550 discuss chapters 27-29 together, as one literary unit. Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, pp. 302-367, argues for a 'Zedekiah Cluster' of narrative prose which includes also ch. 24. For textual difficulties see discussions in Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 115-16; McKane, Jeremiah, pp. 685-694; 709-715; Carroll, pp. 526-529, 538-540.

¹²² Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, pp. 312-313 points out that creation theology is well documented in Jeremiah, and McKane, Jeremiah: A Critical and Exegetical Commentary: Commentary on Jeremiah 26-42 (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1996), II, argues that the creation theology in v. 5 should be compared to ch. 10: 11-13 where it appears in the context of polemic against idolatry (p. 701).

¹²³ 'Humankind and beasts' with reference to their lack/reappearance is typical Jeremiah language, cf. n. 110 p. 125.

all this land into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, my servant.¹²⁴ The Babylonian king is Yahweh's agent, through him comes either deliverance or death.¹²⁵ Thus those who serve him obey Yahweh in doing so, and those who do not serve him disobey Yahweh and therefore will be punished. The 'sword, famine and deber' bring punishment (v. 8); they are instruments of destruction in the hands of the servant of Yahweh. Thus ultimate punishment comes from Yahweh. The triad probably represents/refers to the destruction brought on by war (in this case by the Babylonian army) and the calamities that go together with war, famine and infectious disease. Vv. 8 and 13 contain the same message regarding the punishment (the triad appears in exactly the same order) only the audiences were different; the first was delivered to the nations of v. 3 and the second to king Zedekiah.¹²⁶ In both verses (8 and 13) all three nouns appear with the definite article. However, a personification is possible, understanding the sword, famine and deber as agents of punishments; taking ב instrumentally (as in) through them is Yahweh's punishment carried out.

Jer 28: 8

הַנְּבִיאִים אֲשֶׁר הָיוּ לְפָנַי וְלִפְנֵיךָ מִן־הָעוֹלָם וַיִּנְבְּאוּ אֶל־אַרְצוֹת רַבּוֹת
וְעַל־מַמְלָכוֹת גְּדֹלוֹת לְמַלְחָמָה וְלָרָעָה וְלָדָבָר :

The context of the occurrence of deber in 28: 8 is similar; Jeremiah's ongoing conflict with false prophets who, contrary to Jeremiah, prophesy that obedience to Nabuchadrezzar is not necessary because Yahweh has broken the yoke of the king of Babylon (28:2). Here Jeremiah is in debate with Hananiah before the king, his priests and the people. Hananiah prophecies that within two years Yahweh will bring back all, the exiled king, people and the temple goods. With this he predicts the end of ¹²⁴ Yahweh appoints Nebuchadrezzar lord not only over the lands but also over the wild animals. Cf. Gen 1:26; Ps 8:8 (7). Keown, Scalise & Smothers point out that wild animals were also one of the dangers of war and its aftermath, and that perhaps the significance of Nebuchadrezzar's lordship over them was that they presented another instrument of punishment that Yahweh put into his hands (v. 8). The wild animals would complement/complete the work of his army (p. 50).

¹²⁵ Commentators usually point out the difficulty presented by the term 'my servant' used of Nebuchadrezzar. It is used of Nabuchadrezzar also in Jer 25:9 and 43:10, but nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible of an enemy of Israel. Perhaps Jeremiah's aim was to shock his audience (e.g. Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 315), and one should not attribute to it any theological significance. For a discussion of the use of this term see also p. 247; Keown, Scalise & Smothers, p. 50; Holladay, Jeremiah 2, p. 121; McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, pp. 700-701; Carroll, pp. 531-532. LXX omits it here as well as in 25:9 and 43:10.

¹²⁶ Deber in v. 8 is missing from the LXX and it is translated as 'death' in the Targ. Vg has peste. V. 13 is entirely missing from LXX. Targ and Vg are the same as in v. 8.

Zedekiah's reign. Keown, Scalise and Smothers argue that in fact elements of Hananiah's prophecy were also found in Jeremiah's message which was the authentic message from Yahweh. The difference between false and true prophecy was not that their timing were different (2 vs 70 years) but that Jeremiah conveyed Yahweh's message to obey the king of Babylon.¹²⁷ Those who listened to the false prophets chose to disobey Yahweh.

Jeremiah's response to Hananiah is not in the form of an oracle or another prophecy but as a teaching aimed at everyone listening. Jeremiah seemingly treats Hananiah as an equal when he refers to 'the prophets who were before me and before you' (v. 8),¹²⁸ then sets the criteria of a true prophet; the prophecy has to come true.

On first reading of v. 8 it would seem that the prophets of ancient time were all prophets of doom as they spoke of 'war, evil and deber' to come against many lands and great kingdoms. However, commentators warn us that this would be misunderstanding Jeremiah's point. More likely he contrasted the earlier prophets of doom to Hananiah's peace prophecy because his own message was closer to theirs.¹²⁹ The content of the ancient prophets' message regarding the agents of doom (it is not specified that these are inflicted as punishment) is similar but not the same as Jeremiah's, only the third element, deber is the same, the first and second, 'war' and 'evil' are more general terms than 'sword' and 'famine' used by Jeremiah.¹³⁰ The three nouns occur here with the preposition לְ and no definite article. The preposition has the sense of 'with regard to', 'belonging to', thus it could be argued ¹²⁷ Jeremiah 26-52, p. 54.

¹²⁸ Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 335. Similarly Carroll argues that Hananiah was the 'mirror image' of Jeremiah; their differences were ideological (p. 542).

¹²⁹ Thompson, Jeremiah, pp. 539-540; Keown, Scalise & Smothers, p. 55; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 336. Holladay, Jeremiah 2, notes that the use of the imperfect ('shall prophesy') instead of the participle ('who prophesies') for prophesying suggests that Jeremiah had particular instances in mind in his own historical context and was not speaking generally. The vast majority of 8th and 7th century prophecies were of judgement (p. 128). So also Carroll, p. 544. McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, points to difficulties in interpreting v. 8 (pp. 718-719).

¹³⁰ Keown, Scalise & Smothers (p. 55) note that מְלַחֵמָה is rarely found in Jeremiah (only in 4:19; 6:4, 23 and 21:4). Some commentators (e.g. Carroll, p. 539) change רָעָה to רָעַב on the basis that the usual triad in Jeremiah is רָעַב, חָרָב and דָּבָר. However, this is not necessary as all three terms are meant to carry a broader, more general meaning here. Holladay, Jeremiah 2, omits both רָעָה and דָּבָר following LXX (p. 125). Lundbom (Jeremiah 21-36, p. 335) notes that LXX's omission is perhaps intentional to contrast 'war' and 'peace', while others (McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, p. 712) maintain that LXX is original and MT is an expansion. See discussion in McKane, pp. 711-712.

that the prophets prophesied against the lands and kingdoms as belonging to these agents of punishment. A personification of deber is possible.

5.3.5 Jeremiah 29:17, 18

vv. 17-18

כֹּה אָמַר יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת הַנְּנִי מִשְׁלַח בָּם אֶת־הַחֶרֶב אֶת־הָרֶעַב וְאֶת־הַדָּבָר וְנָתַתִּי
אוֹתָם כְּתֵאֵנִים הַשְּׁעָרִים אֲשֶׁר לֹא־תֵאכְלָנָה מֵרֶעַ:
18 וְרַדְפְּתִי אַחֲרֵיהֶם בְּחֶרֶב בְּרֶעַב וּבַדָּבָר וְנָתַתִּים (לְזֹעָה) (לְזֹעָה) לְכֹל מִמְלָכוֹת
הָאָרֶץ לְאֵלֶּה וּלְשָׁמָּה וּלְשָׂרְקָה וּלְחֶרֶפָה בְּכָל־הַגּוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר־הִדְחִיתִים שָׁם:

This is a prose chapter, consisting of ‘letters’ between Jerusalem and Babylon.¹³¹

Vv. 1-23 is a narrative reporting the text of a letter from Jeremiah to the exiles.¹³²

The present approach follows that of Lundbom who identifies four thematic segments within vv. 1-23 which form a chiasmus based on key words and theme as follows:

Vv. 1-3 Introduction

- A welfare (שְׁלוֹם) of Babylon (vv. 4-9)
- B welfare (שְׁלוֹם) of Jerusalem (v. 10-14)
- B’ judgement in Jerusalem (vv. 15-19)
- A’ judgement in Babylon (vv. 20-23)¹³³

After a concern with welfare (first that of Babylon and those living there, then that of Jerusalem), the theme is judgement. Vv. 15-19 pronounce judgement on those people who did not listen to Yahweh's word (v. 19).¹³⁴ The passage is reminiscent to the vision of Jeremiah about the good and bad figs in chapter 24,¹³⁵ and also brings to mind the judgements pronounced in chapters 14 and 27.

¹³¹ After a lengthy discussion McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, concludes that ch. 29 consists of two letters, one written by Jeremiah to the people deported to Babylon, and one written by Shemaiah to Zephaniah (pp. 735-743). Similarly, Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 137-139, 146-147. Carroll refers to three (p. 555) while Thompson, Jeremiah, talks of at least four letters (p. 544); Keown, Scalise & Smothers argue that ch. 29 would be better regarded as a ‘prophetic “booklet”’, containing a collection of prophetic speeches (pp. 64-66). Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, regards the chapter as a narrative which reports Jeremianic oracles in letter form (pp. 342-346).

¹³² Thompson, Jeremiah, regards vv. 16-20 as disrupting the flow of the letter (p. 545). The passage is missing from the LXX and some scholars think it should be deleted from the MT preferring the shorter Greek version. Some scholars regard vv. 16-20 as a secondary insertion; so Bright, p. 209; Holladay and McKane. On this issue see discussion in Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 134-137, 142-143; McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, pp. 736-748; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 345.

¹³³ Jeremiah 21-36, p. 347. Against Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 138-139; Carroll, pp. 555-559; and others, who take v. 15 after v. 20 thus achieving a different structure.

Deber occurs in vv. 17 and 18 in the known triad in exactly the same order. In v. 17 Yahweh 'sends' (מִשְׁלַחַת, a Piel ptcp. verb) אֶת־הַחֶרֶב אֶת־הָרָעַב וְאֶת־הַדָּבָר, and in v. 18 he 'pursues' (וְרַדְפֹתִי, Qal pf.) the people בַּחֶרֶב בָּרָעַב וּבַדָּבָר.¹³⁶ The context is similar to the previous ones discussed; these three scourges come from Yahweh as a punishment for disobedience. The context is war, thus a meaning for deber as 'plague/pestilence' is possible; some kind of infectious disease following war is preferable.

In v. 17 all three nouns occur with object marker, אֶת־ + definite article + noun, in v. 18 with preposition, בְּ־ + def. art. + noun. A personification of the members of the triad is possible, and would be supported by the verbs used in connection with them.

5.3.6 Jeremiah 32:24, 36

v. 24

הֲנִיָּה הַסְּלִלוֹת בָּאוּ הָעִיר לְלִכְרָהּ וְהָעִיר נִתְּנָה בְיַד הַכַּשְׂדִּים הַנִּלְחָמִים עָלֶיהָ
מִפְּנֵי הַחֶרֶב וְהָרָעַב וְהַדָּבָר וְאֲשֶׁר דִּבְרַתְהָ הָיָה וְהִנֵּה רָאָה:

v. 36

וַעֲתָה לְכֵן כֹּה־אָמַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל־הָעִיר הַזֹּאת אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם אֹמְרִים נִתְּנָה
בְיַד מְלִיךְ־בָּבֶל בַּחֶרֶב וּבָרָעַב וּבַדָּבָר:

The core of this prose chapter is Jeremiah's concern with the buying of a field in Anathoth from a family member, and the consequent act of signing the deed.¹³⁷

¹³⁴ The accusation that the people did not listen to the prophets (thus to Yahweh's words) occurs often in Jeremiah prose, e.g. 7:25-27; 26:4-5; 35:13-15; 36:1-26; 44:4-5 (Keown, Scalise & Smothers, p. 77; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 357).

¹³⁵ Holladay, Jeremiah 2, notes the reference (p. 142) while Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, sees the reference here to Jeremiah's earlier vision as 'a summary of the oracle in 24:8-10' (p. 356). Carroll allows that the figs metaphor might be derived from 24:1-3 but it is used differently here (p. 562). Others merely point to parallels; thus for example, v. 17a and 18a//24:10; 17b//24:2; 18b//24:9 (Keown, Scalise & Smothers, p. 76).

¹³⁶ As mentioned above (n. 32) the passage is missing from LXX; Targ has 'death' and Vg 'pestilence' for deber in both verses.

¹³⁷ Commentators note that although chronologically this chapter would belong with chs 37-38, its present place is also justified because of the message of salvation that it contains (which is also the main theme of chs 30-31). See Keown, Scalise & Smothers, pp. 149-150; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36,

Jeremiah is confused over the meaning of this action; he does not see the point in the present situation of hopelessness (vv. 24-25). He prays to Yahweh hoping for an explanation. Vv. 16-25 contain Jeremiah's prayer to Yahweh, and vv. 26-44 are Yahweh's answer to his prayer with the hoped for explanation. The prayer is in the centre of the chapter.¹³⁸

The prayer starts with a praise of Yahweh (vv. 16-23),¹³⁹ and ends with drawing the deity's attention to the ongoing siege, the outcome of which is certain in Jeremiah's eyes. Yet Yahweh commanded the prophet to make a purchase. Jeremiah does not say explicitly but the question is obvious: in the present circumstance what was the point in such a transaction? Lundbom draws attention to the use of the verb בָּאֵן; בָּאֵן is a 'prophetic perfect' which shows that 'Jeremiah is certain that the siege will be successful'.¹⁴⁰ The siege ramps/mounds (הַסִּלְלוֹת) have entered (בָּאֵן) the city to capture (לְלַכְדָּהָ) it. The siege mounds appear as personified here, they probably refer to the Babylonian army entering, capturing and destroying the city. Indeed the second half of v. 24 states that 'the city is given into the hands of the Chaldeans who are fighting against it'. The destruction is brought about by הַחֲרָב וְהָרָעַב וְהַדָּבָר; these destructive forces are now aiding the Babylonian army. Jeremiah's statement in v. 24 is quoted by Yahweh in v. 36 in his response to the prophet's prayer.¹⁴¹

An explanation of and a reason for the destruction is given in Yahweh's answer in vv. 26-44. The reason is that the people have provoked Yahweh to anger by going after other gods and sacrificing to them. The people's sin is related in detail in vv. 29b-35; they burnt incense to Baal; they gave offerings to other gods; they have done

p. 499; Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 551; Carroll, pp. 618-631 (esp. p. 621); Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 205-220 and 'Introduction', sect. 22.

¹³⁸ For a detailed discussion of ch. 34 see commentaries in note above plus McKane, Jeremiah, pp. 836-852 on textual, grammatical and translation issues.

¹³⁹ The prophet refers to Yahweh's great power in creation; the expression, לֹא-יִפְּלֵא מִמֶּךָ כֹּל-דָּבָר, 'nothing is too difficult for you' is taken up by Yahweh in v. 27, הֲמִמְּנִי יִפְּלֵא כֹּל-דָּבָר, 'is anything too difficult for me?' Many phrases of this praise occur elsewhere in the Hebrew Bible; for example vv. 18-19 remind us of Exod 20:5-6; Deut 5:9-10; v. 20 of Deut 6:22; Neh 9:10; v. 21 of Exod 7:3; Deut 6:22; 7:19; 29:2(3); Pss 78:43; 105:27 (Thompson, Jeremiah, pp. 591-592; Keown, Scalise & Smothers, pp. 155-156; Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, pp. 511-514; Carroll, p. 625; Holladay, Jeremiah 2, p. 208, 216; McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, pp. 843-844).

¹⁴⁰ Jeremiah 21-36, p. 514.

¹⁴¹ Holladay, Jeremiah 2, p. 209. McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, remarks that the use of the triad is 'stereotyped language unskillfully attached to what precedes' (p. 845). This seems an unnecessarily harsh comment.

evil; have provoked Yahweh with their idols; have not listened to teachings but turned their backs; built high places for Baal, sacrificed their sons and daughters to Molech, even set up idols in the Temple of Yahweh. Everyone is guilty ('the people' in v. 29; 'the people of Israel and Judah' and 'the people of Israel' in v. 30; 'this city' in v. 31; 'the people of Israel and Judah'; 'the men of Judah and the people of Jerusalem' in v. 32), people, kings, officials, priests and prophets. This is why they need to be punished. Sword, famine and deber are the means by which the city will be given into the hands of the Babylonian king. In both vv. 24 and 36 sword, famine and deber appear with the definite article (in v. 36 כֶּסֶף + def. art. + noun), and as before it is possible to regard them as personified. They are Yahweh's agents of punishment.

At the end of Yahweh's response there is a promise of salvation, Yahweh will gather the people and bring them back. However, the promise is for a new generation. Punishment is inevitable for those who sinned.

5.3.7 Jeremiah 34:17

v. 17

לְכֵן כֹּה־אָמַר יְהוָה אֱתֶם לֹא־שָׁמַעְתֶּם אֵלַי לְקִרְאָה דְרוֹר אִישׁ לְאָחִיו וְאִישׁ לְרֵעֵהוּ
הִנְנִי קֹרֵא לְכֶם דְרוֹר נְאֻם־יְהוָה אֶל־הַחֶרֶב אֶל־הַדְּבָר וְאֶל־הָרָעַב וְנָתַתִּי אֶתְכֶם
(לְזוּעָה) (לְזוּעָה) לְכֹל מִמְלַכּוֹת הָאָרֶץ:

The first part of this chapter contains an oracle against Zedekiah (vv. 1-7). The second, larger part is a prose narrative concerning a covenant between Zedekiah and the people of Jerusalem made to free the Hebrew slaves (vv. 8-22). After first adhering to the covenant, they then went back on it and enslaved the freed men and women again, thus arousing Yahweh's anger. Vv. 8-17a describe the king's and people's actions and vv. 17b-22 proclaim Yahweh's judgement detailing the punishment of the covenant breakers.¹⁴²

¹⁴² Lundbom (Jeremiah 21-36, p. 556) distinguishes four oracles within vv. 8-22, each introduced by messenger formulas (v. 13; v. 17a; v. 17b; v. 22). Further he points out that oracle I and II are 'indictment' and oracles III and IV 'judgement'. See also McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, pp. 878-884; Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 238-243.

It is variously argued what Zedekiah's intentions were in releasing the slaves; economic, military and religious motivations have been suggested.¹⁴³ The text however is not interested in the king's reasons; the emphasis is on the breaking of the covenant. It seems that the decision to release all Hebrew slaves was made in order to show obedience to God's law,¹⁴⁴ perhaps prompted by the present crisis (the Babylonian army and its allies were threatening Jerusalem), and hoping that this act would grant them deliverance. However, as soon as the threat was lifted (v. 21, 22) they were no longer in need of seeking Yahweh's help and regretted their former act, going back on it, thus breaking their covenant and showing disobedience to Yahweh.¹⁴⁵ Disobedience to Yahweh was a serious crime thus the punishment was severe. There is a play on the words in v. 17; Yahweh states that the people have not been obedient (lit. 'you have not listened', לֹא-שָׁמְעֵתֶם) to him in 'proclaiming liberty (לְקִרְאָה דְּרִוּר) each to his brother and each to his neighbour'. In his turn Yahweh is 'proclaiming liberty' (קִרְאָה לְכֶם דְּרִוּר), to 'sword, deber and famine'. The expression קִרְאָה דְּרִוּר is here used ironically; these agents of punishment are free to destroy the disobedient people.

The triad appears here in different order (deber comes before famine) but its function is similar to previously discussed passages. They are agents of punishment from Yahweh for the people's disobedience. The following verses make it clear that the punishment is meant to be total destruction (Jerusalem and the cities of Judah will be burnt down, laid to waste, so that no-one can live in them).

¹⁴³ See summary in Keown, Scalise & Smothers, pp. 187-188; Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 238-239; Carroll, pp. 647-650. For a different view see Lundbom, Jeremiah 21-36, p. 561.

¹⁴⁴ Cf. Exod 21:2-6; Deut 15:12-18. Against Carroll who argues that vv. 8-11 are midrashic, and are different from the law set out in Exod 21:1-11 and Deut 15:12-18 'because that does not contemplate the ending of the bondage but the regulation of the practice' (p. 649). As mentioned above, the emphasis is on the breaking of the law not on which specific law is alluded to.

¹⁴⁵ Thompson, Jeremiah, p. 611; Keown, Scalise & Smothers, p. 187. Lundbom (Jeremiah 21-36, p. 564) points out that whatever the motive was for the release of the slaves, it is clear from the passage that it was the right action. He writes: 'The fact that the king and the people reneged on the covenant makes it seem as if they did not listen to Yahweh at all, putting their disobedience on the same level as that of earlier generations (v. 14b).'

5.3.8 Jeremiah 38:2

v. 2

כֹּה אָמַר יְהוָה הַיֹּשֵׁב בְּעִיר הַזֹּאת יָמוּת בַּחֶרֶב בְּרָעַב וּבַדָּבָר וְהִצִּיא
אֶל־הַפְּשָׁדִים (יְחִיָּה) [וְיָחִיָּה] וְהִיָּתָה־לוֹ נַפְשׁוֹ לְשָׁלָל וְחָי׃

Deber occurs in v. 2 together with ‘war’ and ‘famine’ in the usual order (sword, famine and deber).¹⁴⁶ The verse is a reference to Jeremiah’s prophecy in ch. 21:8-10, and there are also parallels with previous chapters (24:1-10; 27:8, 13; 29:15-19). Jeremiah’s message is consistent. Yahweh’s wants the people to surrender to Nebuchadrezzar because he is Yahweh’s agent; Jerusalem’s (and Judah’s) destruction is happening because Yahweh wants it to happen. It is punishment for the people’s sins. These sins are listed in detail in 32:26-44.

The people’s fate is in the hands of the agents of Yahweh. Both salvation and destruction come from him alone and are executed by his agents. Leaving the city means putting themselves in the hands of Nebuchadrezzar (agent of salvation), and it offers hope of survival to the people; staying means giving themselves up to the agents of destruction and certain death.¹⁴⁷

5.3.9 Jeremiah 42:17, 22 and 44: 13

Jer 42:17

וַיְהִיו כָּל־הָאֲנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר־שָׁמוּ אֶת־פְּנֵיהֶם לְבוֹא מִצְרַיִם לְגֹר שָׁם יָמוּתוּ בַּחֶרֶב
בְּרָעַב וּבַדָּבָר וְלֹא־יְהִיָּה לָהֶם שְׂרִיד וּפְלִיט מִפְּנֵי הָרָעָה אֲשֶׁר אָנִי מֵבִיא עֲלֵיהֶם׃

v. 22

וְעַתָּה יָדַע תְּדַעוּ כִּי בַּחֶרֶב בְּרָעַב וּבַדָּבָר תָּמוּתוּ בַּמָּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר חִפְצְתֶם לְבוֹא
לְגֹר שָׁם׃

Jer 44:13

וּפָקַדְתִּי עַל הַיּוֹשְׁבִים בְּאֶרֶץ מִצְרַיִם כַּאֲשֶׁר פָּקַדְתִּי עַל־יְרוּשָׁלָּיִם בַּחֶרֶב בְּרָעַב
וּבַדָּבָר׃

Chapter 42 refers to the remnant left in Judah who turn to Jeremiah after the crisis caused by Ishmael. His killing Gedaliah who was appointed by the king of Babylon ¹⁴⁶ Deber is missing from the LXX; Targ has ‘death’ and Vg peste.

¹⁴⁷ For a detailed discussion of Jer 38 see commentaries, e.g. Thompson, Jeremiah, pp. 635-643; Carroll, pp. 678-681; Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 266-268, 280-287, 289-290; McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, pp. 946-971; Lundbom, Jeremiah 37-52: A New Translation with Introduction, AB 21C (New York: Doubleday, 2004), pp. 4-6; 64-73; Keown, Scalise & Smothers, pp. 219-226.

was an act of treachery.¹⁴⁸ The remnant fears the consequence that the Babylonians would retaliate. It seems that they do not know what to do, so they turn to Jeremiah asking him to enquire of Yahweh, promising that they would obey whatever God's answer would be. However, 41:17 indicates that the people had already decided to go on to Egypt, so 42:1-6 emphasises their treachery.¹⁴⁹

Yahweh's word to the people through Jeremiah is the same, disobedience just as idolatry (which is the subject of ch. 44) deserves punishment. The triad of 'sword, famine and deber' will bring Yahweh's punishment (44:13) on the people, and it is clear that they are meant to bring death. All three verses state 'you/they shall die by...'.¹⁵⁰ As before, the triad represent Yahweh's agents of destruction who carry out punishment which comes from Yahweh.

5.3.10 Summary of occurrences of deber in Jeremiah

Examining all the occurrences of deber in the Book of Jeremiah the following can be concluded. Deber occurs 17x in Jeremiah, 15x together with 'sword' and 'famine', 1x in itself (both humans and animals will die of a great deber, 21:6) and 1x together with 'war' and 'disaster/evil' (28:8). It has been argued that 'sword, famine and pestilence (deber)' is stereotyped Jeremianic language, certainly the triad first appears in Jeremiah 14:12.¹⁵¹

¹⁴⁸ Jer 41:16-18.

¹⁴⁹ Thompson (Jeremiah, p. 664) argues that vv. 5-6 present the people as 'making a show of sincerity' by having them affirm three times that they would obey Yahweh's word וְאִם-טוֹב וְאִם-רָעָה, 'whether good or whether bad', adding an emphatic כִּי, 'indeed' towards the end of the verse.

¹⁵⁰ Deber is missing from LXX in 42:17 and 22; and it is translated by 'by death' in 44:13. Targ has 'death' and Vg peste in all three verses. For a detailed discussion of these chapters see commentaries: Thompson, Jeremiah, pp. 662-668, 672-682; Carroll, pp. 714-721, 728-733; Holladay, Jeremiah 2, pp. 273-287, 298-306; McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, pp.1030-1049, 1068-1095; Lundbom, Jeremiah 37-52, pp.10-14, 125-138, 151-170; Keown, Scalise & Smothers, pp. 245-253, 259-269.

¹⁵¹ W. L. Holladay, 'Prototype and Copies: A New Approach to the Poetry-Prose Problem in the Book of Jeremiah', JBL 79 (1960), 351-367 has argued that the triad does not occur before Jeremiah, and its frequency in the book points to a strong pattern. Holladay further argues that Jer 15:2 (and perhaps 18:21) is the poetic prototype of this triad, although there 'death' (מָוֶת) replaces deber (דֵּבֶר) as a 'poetic synonym'. However, it has to be pointed out that the triad occurs with deber in 14:12, prior to 15:2; and the two appear in parallel together in some passages (e.g. Hos 13: 14; Ps 78:50, also poetic passages). This points against identifying one with the other. The triad was also studied by H. Weippert in Die Prosareden des Jeremiabuches (Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1973), pp. 149-191. Hers is a thorough tradition-historical investigation, the most complete study of the form and occurrences of the triad in Jeremiah to date. It includes the history of the motif (pp. 149-180) and an examination of its special contexts. Weippert reaches a similar, although more cautious conclusion, as Holladay,

All of the occurrences of deber are in prose passages; in all but two cases (21:6 and 28:8) it occurs with the definite article as ‘preposition + definite article + noun’, this suggesting that it cannot be a proper noun. Most often it occurs with the preposition מִן (10x)¹⁵² which can be taken instrumentally.

It comes as a punishment from Yahweh for the people’s disobedience (usually as a punishment for idolatry), except in two cases where it is the enemy (the Chaldeans/Babylonians) who takes Jerusalem by the ‘sword, famine and deber’ (32:24 and 32:36), and once where it is a prophecy that it is referred to (28:8, war, disaster and deber). However, even in these cases the punishment is ultimately from Yahweh, the Babylonian king and his army are acting as his agents who carry out the punishment. The verbs that occur with deber are noteworthy. Most often it is some form of מוֹת , and in these cases the people are the subject of the sentence, they shall die by/through deber or ‘deber, sword and famine’.¹⁵³ However, in most cases Yahweh is the subject, he ‘hands the people over’ (lit. ‘gives’ נָתַן); he ‘finishes’ (כָּלָה), ‘smites’ (נָכַח), ‘visits’ (in order to punish, פָּקַד), ‘pursues’ (רָדַף) them; he ‘wages war’ (לָחַם) on them, ‘brings in’ (בָּאָה) the evil on them, and he ‘sends’ (שָׁלַח) the agents of punishment to bring death to the people. This emphasises the fact that in every instance the punishment comes from Yahweh himself.

A personification of deber is most clearly suggested in Jer 21:6, and it is possible, though not certain, in all the other passages.

The usual meaning given to deber is ‘plague/ pestilence’, and this certainly is possible. Wars in the ancient world were often accompanied by famine and disease. Epidemics, the outbreak of infectious diseases, were amongst the greatest killers of the ancient as well as the medieval world. However, Meyers points out that there is a difference between ‘pestilence’ and ‘plague’.¹⁵⁴ One is an ‘endemic parasitic disease, that is infections which occur in a community more or less all the time asserting that the triad is probably a genuine Jeremianic motif and it is certainly not Deuteronomistic language (p. 191). Contrary to this view some scholars, e.g. McKane, Jeremiah 26-52, have argued that the triad is typical Deuteronomistic language (p. 879).

¹⁵² These are: Jer 14:12; 21:9; 27:8, 13; 29:18; 32:36; 38: 2; 42:17, 22; 44:13. 2x it occurs with מִן (24:10 and 29:17); 2x with מִן (21:7 and 32:24) and 1x with אֶל־ (34:17).

¹⁵³ The ‘dying’ is expressed by $\text{מָוֹת} + \text{וָהוּ}$ + וּבְרָר in every instance (21:9; 27:13; 38:2; 42:17; 21:6).

¹⁵⁴ C. Meyers, ‘The Roots of Restriction: Women in Early Israel’, BA 41 no. 3 (1978), 91-103, esp. pp. 95-99.

without much alteration in their effects from year to year or even century to century’, the other is an ‘abnormal occurrence of acute infectious disease’. He suggests that deber is used to refer to the former, pestilence, and that maggephah is used to describe ‘plague’ (e.g. in Numbers and Exodus).¹⁵⁵ However, in none of the passages discussed in Jeremiah is it specified what kind of disease is meant by deber. The emphasis is on it being a deadly force that together with sword (i.e. war) and famine brings total destruction to the people, only occasionally is there a hope of survival. Thus a more general translation such as suggested by Bright, ‘disease’ seems preferable to pestilence or plague.¹⁵⁶

5.4 Deber in Ezekiel

The noun deber occurs 11x in the Book of Ezekiel in the following passages: 5:12, 17; 6:11, 12; 7:15; 12:16; 14:19,21; 28:23; 33:27 and 38:22. We shall examine these.

5.4.1 Ezekiel 5: 12 and 17

v. 12
שְׁלֵשִׁיתֶיךָ בַּדָּבָר יָמוּתוּ וּבְרָעַב יָכְלוּ בְּתוֹכָךָ וְהִשְׁלֵשִׁית בְּחָרֵב יַפְּלוּ סְבִיבוֹתֶיךָ
וְהִשְׁלֵשִׁית לְכָל־רוּחַ אֲזָרָה וְחָרֵב אָרִיק אַחֲרֵיהֶם:

v. 17
וְשִׁלַּחְתִּי עֲלֵיכֶם רָעַב וְחֵיָה רָעָה וְשִׁפְלָה וְדָבָר נָדָם יַעֲבֹר־בְּךָ וְחָרֵב אָבִיא עָלֶיךָ
אֲנִי יְהוָה דִּבַּרְתִּי:

Commentators generally regard 3:22-5:17 as a literary unit which follows the pattern common to the book: divine vision, followed by divine speech (3:22-24a and 3:24b-5:17).¹⁵⁷ The section of divine speech consists of several commands; Ezekiel is to ¹⁵⁵ Meyers, ‘Roots of Restriction’, pp. 95-96. He discusses as examples Num 16: 44-50; 21:6; 11: 1-3; 14:11; 25; Exod 32:35. For the devastating effect of plagues in the ancient Near East see for example the Plague Prayer of Mursilis, ANET, pp. 394-396; Meyers also refers to the Amarna letters (p. 96).

¹⁵⁶ See above p. 121.

¹⁵⁷ M. Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1983), p. 4. W. Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Ezekiel, Chapters 1-24, transl. by R. E. Clements, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1979), takes 3: 16b, 22 – 5:17 as a unit, arguing that 3:16b-21 is a ‘redactional insertion’ (p. 154), while L. C. Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, WBC 28 (Dallas: Word Books, 1994) regards 3:16-5:17 as one unit, 3:16-21 being ‘a divine announcement of Ezekiel’s appointment as prophetic watchman and an elaboration of his consequent responsibilities’ (p. 55).

perform a series of symbolic actions.¹⁵⁸ He is commanded to go out to the plain where he experiences a theophany (3:22-24); then has to shut himself inside his house, tied up and dumb (3:25-27). Chapter 4 and 5:1-4 depict the prophet enacting a symbolic siege of Jerusalem, lying on his side while eating siege-food bearing the guilt of Israel then Judah, and finally, shaving off and disposing of his hair and beard. This last act points to the end of the siege and depicts the fate of the besieged (v. 2).¹⁵⁹ The shaved off hair is to be divided into three parts:

- 1/3 is to be burned (תִּבְעֵיר Hiph. vb.) by fire (בְּאֵיֹר) inside the city (בְּתוֹךְ הָעִיר)
- 1/3 is to be stricken (תִּכָּהַר Hiph. vb.) by sword¹⁶⁰ (בְּחֶרֶב) around the city (סְבִיבוֹתֶיהָ)
- 1/3 is to be scattered (תִּזְרָה Q. vb.) to the wind (לְרֵיחַ) (into all directions) sword unleashed (אָרִיק Hiph. vb.) after them - וְחָרַב אָרִיק אַחֲרֵיהֶם

Some to be hidden away in the folds of the prophet's garment

A few of these to be burned by fire

This section links to both the preceding and the following sections. The 'city' refers to the city drawn on the clay tablet of 4:1 as well as to the real city of Jerusalem (v. 5).¹⁶¹ The hair in v.1 represents the people of Jerusalem; the prophet's actions (vv. 1-4) give a grim prediction of their fate as the following verses make it clear (v. 12).

- 1/3 of the people will die (יָמוּתוּ) by deber (בְּדֶבֶר) or perish (יָכִלוּ) by famine (בְּרָעָב) inside the city (בְּתוֹכָהּ) ¹⁵⁸ Five, according to Allen: seclusion, 3:24b-27; acting out the siege of Jerusalem, 4:1-3; depicting Israel's guilt, 4:4-8; depicting the cruelty of the siege, 4:9-15; and depicting the fate of the people under siege, 5:1-17 (Ezekiel 1-19, p. 55 and 58). However, other commentators speak only of three 'sign-acts'. These are: 1) enacting the siege of the city; 2) bearing the guilt of Israel and Judah by lying on his side and eating unclean food; 3) shaving of the hair (J. Wevers, Ezekiel, The Century Bible (London: Thomas Nelson, 1969), p. 64. Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 117-126, and Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, pp. 161-173).

¹⁵⁹ According to R. E. Clements Ezekiel's 'strange mode of preaching' may be explained by his desire to attract an audience before disclosing his message. See Ezekiel (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1996), p. 23.

¹⁶⁰ D. Bodi, The Book of Ezekiel and the Poem of Erra, Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis 104 (Freiburg: Universitätsverlag, 1991) argues that 'the Book of Ezekiel makes a particular contribution to the sword motif in the Old Testament'. He believes that Ezek 21:13-22 contains the 'Song of the Sword', which has many parallels with the Mesopotamian Poem of Erra (pp. 231-257).

¹⁶¹ On Jerusalem at the centre of the nations as being 'the navel of the earth', its connection with 38:12 and Mesopotamian parallels of the motif see Bodi, pp. 221-230.

- 1/3 will fall (יִפְּלוּ) by sword (בַּחֶרֶב) outside the walls (סְבִיבוֹתֶיהָ)
- 1/3 will be scattered (אֶזְרָה) to the winds (in all directions, לְכָל-רִיחַ)- and sword (חֶרֶב) unleashed (אָרִיק) after them - וַחֶרֶב אָרִיק אַחֲרֵיהֶם

The intensity of the prophet's actions is illustrated by the use of three Hiphil verbs in one verse, and its link with v. 12 is clear from the repetition of the same words (בתוך, סביב, רוח, זרה, חרב) and expressions (וַחֶרֶב אָרִיק אַחֲרֵיהֶם). That the destruction that is to befall the people of Jerusalem (and on the whole of Israel) comes as a punishment¹⁶² from Yahweh is made clear in v. 8; Yahweh states: 'behold, I am against you, even I' (הִנְנִי עָלֶיךָ גַם-אֲנִי). Commentators note that the expression הִנְנִי עָלֶיךָ has a threatening meaning in all but one of its occurrences,¹⁶³ and similarly, the second phrase, גַם-אֲנִי, usually introduces announcements of punishment.¹⁶⁴ Thus the whole verse has a menacing overtone. The object of the punishment is Jerusalem, and the reason for the punishment is given before the announcement of judgement in the accusation in vv. 5-7, 11. Jerusalem is accused of:

- wickedness (v. 6)
- rebellion against and rejection of Yahweh's laws and decrees (v. 6)
- they are worse than the nations around (v. 7)
- idol worship (v. 9a, 11)

A detailed account of what form the punishment is going to take follows the announcement of punishment in vv. 9b- 10, 12, 14-17. That Jerusalem's guilt is great (¹⁶⁵תועבותיך, 'abominations', i.e. all the sins referred to above) and therefore the punishment is severe is clear from Yahweh's statement in v. 9, 'I shall do to you what I have not done (before) and what I shall (never) do' (וְעָשִׂיתִי בְךָ אֵת אֲשֶׁר לֹא עָשִׂיתִי בְךָ לְאִשְׁרָיִם). The Hebrew is striking; the repetition of the same ¹⁶² The expression עשה משפטים, 'make judgements' is common in the book (e.g. Ezek 24:14; 30:14, 19; 35:11). משפטים, 'judgements' is used here in the sense of 'punishment'. See Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, p. 74; Greenberg, Ezekiel, 1-20, p. 113; C. R. Biggs, The Book of Ezekiel (London: Epworth Press, 1996), p. 18.

¹⁶³ Zimmerli points out that the expression occurs 22x in the HB, most frequently in Ezekiel (14x, in 5:8; 13:8, 20; 21:8; 26:3; 28:22; 29:3, 10; 30:22; 34:10; 35:3; 36:9; 38:3; 39:1). There are 6 in Jeremiah (21:13; 23:30-32; 50:31; 51:25) and 2 in Nahum (2:14; 3:5). In Ezek 36:9 the expression has a positive sense, 'I am for you' rather than 'against you' (Ezekiel 1, p. 175). K. L. Wong, The Idea of Retribution in the Book of Ezekiel, VT Supp (Leiden: Brill, 2001) quoting Humbert (p. 92).

¹⁶⁴ Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 113; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, p. 74; Wong, p. 92.

¹⁶⁵ Cf. Deut 7:25; 13:15; 17:4; 32:16.

words (the same verb occurs three times) expresses the threat behind their meaning. V. 9 suggests that a unique punishment is to befall the people. One is reminded of the curses for covenant breakers from Lev 26:29,¹⁶⁶ but whereas there fathers only would eat their children, here the prophet adds a twist and reverses the curse: children will also eat their fathers. However, this is not the end of the punishment, only leading up to more in v. 12. Vv. 14-17 seem to repeat and expand on the punishment described in v. 12. The expressions in vv. 14 and 15 are reminiscent of Jeremiah,¹⁶⁷ but they also remind one of Lev 26:31.¹⁶⁸ Yahweh shall make the people a reproach (הַרְפָּה), a taunt (וְגִדְּוּפָהּ), a warning (מוֹסַר) and a horror (וּמִשְׂמֵה) when he makes judgment/punishes them in anger (בְּאַף), in fury (וּבְחִמָּה) and in furious rebuke (וּבַתְּכַחֲוֹת (חִמָּה). The intensity of Yahweh's anger is expressed through speech in the first person which culminates in the final statement, 'I, Yahweh, have spoken' (אֲנִי יְהוָה (דִּבַּרְתִּי).

V. 16 continues to relay Yahweh's punishment. He sends (בְּשִׁלְחִי) his arrows of evil famine (אֶת־חַצֵּי הָרָעַב הָרָעִים) and more and more famine (וְרָעַב אֶסֶף) on them. These are meant to destroy. This is expressed by repetition, which are for destruction אֲשֶׁר הֵיוּ לְמַשְׁחִית which I shall send on them to ruin them אֲשֶׁר־אֲשַׁלַּח אֹתָם לְשַׁחֲתֶכֶם

V. 17a repeats the essence of v. 16, וְשִׁלַּחְתִּי עֲלֵיכֶם רָעַב. However, it introduces some new elements too; with famine Yahweh sends רָעַב, 'beings of evil', and with deber comes also דָּם, 'blood(shed)'. רָעַב רָעִי is usually translated as 'wild animals/ beasts'¹⁶⁹ or 'evil animals/beasts',¹⁷⁰ with LXX combining the two into 'evil wild beasts' (θηρία πονηρα). This is no doubt because, as it has already been pointed out, this passage echoes Lev 26, and v. 17a Lev 26:22a in particular.

¹⁶⁶ 'You shall eat the flesh of your sons and the flesh of your daughters you shall eat.' (Lev 26:29) Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, notes that the reference to cannibalism here appears to be a 'loose citation of Lev. 26:29' (p. 74). Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, takes this further; he argues that Ezekiel 4 and 5 are based on Lev 26:14-39. He writes: 'It is an identical mentality that permeates Ezek 4-5; we note how in particular the threat of Lev 26:25, "I will bring upon you a sword exacting retribution for [breach of] the covenant" is repeatedly picked up in ch. 5: what is in Lev 26 a hypothetical threat ("If you reject my judgements...") is here a sure prediction of coming doom.' (p. 124.) Similarly Wong argues that 'the covenant context serves as the backbone for this oracle' (p. 91).

¹⁶⁷ Jer 24:9; 29:18; 18:16; 19:8.

¹⁶⁸ Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 115-116; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, pp. 76-77; Wong, pp. 93-94.

¹⁶⁹ NIV, NJB, RSV, Greenberg and Zimmerli.

¹⁷⁰ JPS, Targ and Vg. Allen translates 'vicious animals'.

J. Blair 5. Deber

Lev 26:22a:

וְהִשְׁלַחְתִּי בְכֶם אֶת־חַיֵּי הַשָּׂדֶה וְשִׂכְלָה אֶתְכֶם

And Ezek 5:17a:

וְהִשְׁלַחְתִּי עֲלֵיכֶם רָעַב וְחַיֵּי רָעָה וְשִׂכְלָה

The similarities are undeniable.¹⁷¹ However, in Leviticus we have אֶת־חַיֵּי הַשָּׂדֶה as the object of the verb שִׁלַּח, meaning ‘wild animals’, whereas in Ezek the רָעָה וְחַיֵּי is ambiguous. It is possible that this was intentionally so.

Vv. 16-17 also remind one of the poem in Deut 32.¹⁷² Deut 32:22 speaks of Yahweh’s great anger (אַף) because of the people’s idolatry (they are guilty of the same things as in the present passage); the following verses describe the punishment. Yahweh unleashes his destructive forces, called ‘evils’ and identified as his ‘arrows’ in v. 23 (אַסְפָּה עֲלֵימוֹ רָעוֹת חֲצִי אֶכְלֶה־בָּם). Yahweh’s arrows are enlisted as seven destructive forces in Deut 32:24-25a, famine (רָעָב), plague (רָשָׁף), bitter scourge (קִטְטָב מְרִירִי), fang of wild animals (שֵׁן־בְּהֵמוֹת), poison of snakes (חֲמַת), sword (חֶרֶב) and terror (אִימָה). It is argued in the analysis of Deut 32 that these seven destructive forces are personified and that they represent Yahweh’s agents, his angels of evil, i.e. bringers of evils.¹⁷³

Ezek 5:16a reads:

בְּשִׁלְחֵי אֶת־חֲצִי הַרָעַב הַרָעִים בָּהֶם

v. 17:b:

וְדָבַר נֹדָם יַעֲבֹר־בָּךְ וְחָרֵב אָבִיא עֲלֶיךָ

As often in Jeremiah, we have here deber, famine and sword together as agents of punishment, bringers of death and destruction.¹⁷⁴ It is possible that the ‘arrows of evil famine’ in v. 16 is one of Yahweh’s ‘evils’ or ‘arrows’ as in Deut 32:23; this way the רָעָה וְחַיֵּי would be better understood literally and more generally as ‘beings of evil’, i.e. ‘beings that are bringers of evils’, rather than ‘wild animals’. Thus רָעַב, דָּבַר and חָרֵב are these ‘beings of evil’, bringers of destruction. The verbs

¹⁷¹ Leviticus uses the Hiphil form of the verb שִׁלַּח whereas we have a Piel in Ezekiel.

¹⁷² Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 116-117; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, p. 77, and Wong, p. 94, have also pointed out the similarities.

¹⁷³ See discussion of Deut 32 in 6.4.

¹⁷⁴ Allen notes that Ezekiel might have borrowed the triad ‘deber, famine and sword’ from Jeremiah, but used it ‘rather more freely’ (Ezekiel 1-19, p. 75).

employed in vv.16 and 17 (עבר, שכל, שלח) suggest personification, and this is supported by these two verses. Yahweh ‘sends’ against Israel Famine and Beings of Evil, ‘brings in’ against them Sword; the nouns although functioning as objects do not have the object marker. Further Deber and Dam are the subjects of the verb עבר. They pass over the people causing destruction. In v. 12 also through (כִּי is taken instrumentally) these agents the people will die (יָמוּתוּ), fall (יִפְּלוּ) and will be finished off (יִכָּלֵוּ). Therefore I suggest that Deber along with Dam, Famine and Sword are personified as Yahweh’s ‘beings of evil’ and they function as agents of destruction, bringers of death upon the people as a punishment for their idolatry, the ultimate sin against Yahweh. Regarding the meaning of the word deber all we can say with certainty is that it refers to something deadly and destructive. As disease, just as war (sword and bloodshed) and famine, was one of the greatest killers of the ancient world, this meaning for the word is possible.

5.4.2 Ezekiel 6: 11 and 12

vv. 11-12

כַּחֲאֹמֶר אֲדֹנָי יְהוִה הֵבִיחַ בְּכַפְּוֹ וּרְקַע בְּרִגְלֹוֹ וְאָמַר-אֵחָ אֶל כָּל-תּוֹעֵבֹת רְעוֹת
בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר בְּחָרֵב בְּרָעַב וּבְדָבָר יִפְּלוּ:
הֲרַחֲוֹק בְּדָבָר יָמוּת וְהֶקְרֹוב בְּחָרֵב יִפּוֹל וְהַנָּשָׂאָר וְהַנֶּצֶזִיר בְּרָעַב יָמוּת וְכִלְיֹתַי
חִמְּתִי בָם:

Chapter 6 is a separate literary unit but its theme (destruction of the land and its people) continues that of chs 4-5.¹⁷⁵ It consists of two prophetic oracles written in poetic style. The first, longer oracle is addressed to the mountains (אֶל-הָרֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל); various forms and derivatives of שָׁמֵם in 6:4 (יִשָּׁם, ‘to be desolate’, וְנִשְׁמָו, ‘to be broken’, וְנִשְׁפְּרוּ); 6:6 (יִשָּׁם, ‘to be desolate’, תִּישְׁמָנָה, ‘devastation’); 6:14 (שְׁמָמָה, ‘devastation’; מִשְׁמָה, ‘devastation’) and 4:17 (וְנִשְׁמָו, ‘to be desolate’); 5: 15 (מִשְׁמָה, ‘devastation’). Also ‘to spend my (Yahweh’s) anger’, וְכִלְיֹתַי חִמְּתִי in 6:12, and וְכָלָה אִפִּי in 5:13; as well as the occurrence of the triad חָרֵב, רָעַב, וְדָבָר in 6:11 and 5:17.

¹⁷⁵ Wevers, pp. 67-68; Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, p. 182; Clements, Ezekiel, p. 26; Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 139. He also points out some of the linguistic links between chs 6 and 4-5. For example, Yahweh’s bringing of the sword against the people in 6:3 (אֲנִי מֵבִיא עָלֵיכֶם חֶרֶב) and 5:17 (וְחָרֵב אָבִי עָלַיְךָ);

a rhetoric device),¹⁷⁶ vv. 1-10; the second, shorter one to the people of Israel (בֵּית (יִשְׂרָאֵל), vv. 11-14. The two oracles are linked thematically and linguistically.¹⁷⁷

V. 3 announces that the sword (חֶרֶב) is being brought against the mountains (meaning the people of Israel) in order to destroy the high places and altars on them, evidence of the people's idolatry. Thus destruction by the sword comes as a punishment for worshipping other gods than Yahweh, the same theme as in the previous chapter.¹⁷⁸ The following verses (vv. 4-7) describe in detail the extent of the destruction, not only the places and items of worship but the people who used them will be destroyed, and entire towns will be wiped out.¹⁷⁹

Similarly to the first oracle, the second also announces imminent destruction because of Israel's idolatry (כָּל-תּוֹעֲבוֹת רְעוֹת בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל). Punishment this time comes by the sword, famine and deber; וּבְחֶרֶב בְּרָעַב וּבְדָבָר יִפְּלוּ (v. 11). V. 12 repeats and expands the message, the distant (one) will die by deber	הַרְחֹק בְּדָבָר יָמוּת

the near (one) will fall by sword	וְהַקְּרֹב בְּחֶרֶב יִפּוֹל
those who remain and are preserved will die by famine	וְהַנִּשְׁאָר וְהַנִּצְוֹר בְּרָעַב יָמוּת

The division of the people to be punished according to three means of punishment reminds us of the distribution of the prophet's hair into thirds and his actions with it in 5:2 and the subsequent explanation of his acts in v. 12. However, there, and in the first oracle (v. 8), there was a remnant left alive, whereas vv. 11-14 here only focus on the severity of the punishment and the completeness of the destruction. Thus in this case too, deber,¹⁸⁰ together with sword and famine is an agent of destruction, coming from Yahweh as punishment for the people's idolatry. Through them (again ¹⁷⁶ On the interpretation of 'mountains of Israel' see Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, pp. 185-186; Wong, pp. 96-97.

¹⁷⁷ Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 137-138. Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, on the other hand warns that there are also differences 'in perspective' that should not be overlooked (p. 85). This however, does not affect our discussion of the text.

¹⁷⁸ Wong argues that the expression 'mountains of Israel' is used by Ezekiel 'because of its connotation of false worship' (p. 97).

¹⁷⁹ מַעֲשֵׂה occurs referring to idols (made by men) in Deut 4:28; 2 Kgs 19:18; Isa 2:8; 17:8; 37:19; 41:29; 57:12; 2 Chr 32:19; Pss 115:4; 135:15; Hos 13:2; 14:4; Mic 5:12; Jer 1:16; 10:3, 9; 25:6; 44:8 (BDB, 796; HALOT, 617/5). The verb מָחָה, 'to wipe out' occurs in the Flood story in Gen 6:7; 7:4, 23 (BDB, 562; HALOT, 568).

¹⁸⁰ In both verses LXX and Targ translate deber by 'death', Vg by 'pestilence'.

they appear with כִּי which signals that they are Yahweh's instruments) the people will die (יָמוּת) and fall (יִפְּלוּ). V. 13 gives a picture of complete destruction.¹⁸¹

Following on from the argument that these agents of destruction were personified in Ezek 5, it is likely that they are personified here too.

5.4.3 Ezekiel 7: 15

v. 15

תִּחָרַב בַּחוּץ וְתִדְבַר וְהָרַעַב מִבַּיִת אֲשֶׁר בְּשָׂדֵה בַּחֲרָב יָמוּת וְאֲשֶׁר בְּעִיר רָעַב
וְדָבַר יָנִי:

Although a separate literary unit, the theme of this chapter is very similar to the ones discussed previously; punishment ('the end', קֵץ בָּא תִקֵּץ, v. 3, 6; 'the day', הַיּוֹם, v. 10,12) is coming because of the sins ('ways', דְּרָכֵינִי and 'detestable practices', וְתוֹעֲבוֹתַי, v. 4; 'because of their iniquity/sins', בְּעֲוֹנוֹ, v. 13, i.e. idolatry) of the people. The chapter consists of two oracles, vv. 2-9 and vv. 10-27 with v. 1 introducing both oracles.¹⁸² The oracles are written in poetic style.¹⁸³ The common introduction, the style, similar theme and common words link the two oracles together.

The second oracle (vv. 10-27) is lengthy; both Greenberg and Allen regard it as falling into two parts; vv. 10-18 and vv. 19-27 with parallel elements.¹⁸⁴ The oracle starts with a sudden outburst announcing the nearness of the day of doom, presented as the Day of Yahweh; then the end is pictured in parallel scenes:

- pointlessness of trade in vv. 12-13 // pointlessness of wealth in v. 19
- war and destruction in vv. 14-16 // foreign invasion and destruction in vv. 21-24

¹⁸¹ For more detailed discussion of the chapter see commentaries; e.g. Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, pp. 179-192; Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 129-141; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, pp. 81-92; Clements, Ezekiel, 26-28; on the relationship between Ezek 4-6 and Lev 26 see Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, pp. 92-96 and Wong, pp. 95-102.

¹⁸² Commentators vary slightly on the division of the chapter. Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, divides it into two sections, vv. 2-4 and 5-27 (p. 210); Wevers (pp. 71-73); Greenberg (Ezekiel 1-20, p. 157) and Biggs (pp. 21-25) divide it into two, as above, whereas Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, argues for 'three two-part proof sayings' in vv. 2-4, 5-9 and 10-27 (pp. 103-104), and Clements (Ezekiel, pp. 29-32) regards the whole as one. This does not affect our discussion as we concentrate on the second oracle, vv. 10-27.

¹⁸³ Wevers, p. 71; Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 157; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, pp. 97-99. Clements, Ezekiel, sets vv. 17-20 as prose (p. 29).

¹⁸⁴ Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 157-158; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, pp. 103-104.

- general demoralization and mourning in vv. 17-18 // general dismay and confusion in vv. 25-27

There are clues within the oracle as to why the end is coming, as Greenberg puts it, ‘the time is ripe for punishment’. He argues that although vv. 10 and 11 are ambiguous and difficult to translate this meaning is clear.¹⁸⁵ Further, vv. 13 and 16 refer to the people’s iniquity (וְאִישׁ בְּעֵוֹנוֹ), ‘and each according to his iniquity’, and v. 20 makes it clear that what is meant by this ‘iniquity’ is that they were proud of the beauty of their idols which they themselves made (וַיִּצְבְּבוּ עֲדֵיזֵי לְגִּבּוֹן שְׂמָהוּ),¹⁸⁶ but which were detestable things, abominations in Yahweh’s eyes (וַיִּצְלַמְי תוֹעֲבֹתָם) (שְׂקִינֵייהֶם). The people’s sin (iniquity) gave rise to Yahweh’s wrath (חֲמָתִי) and anger (אַפִּי) resulting in judgement and punishment (vv. 8-9).

As in the previous chapters, the punishment is brought about by Yahweh’s agents, דְּחַרְבַּר, דְּרֶעֶב and דְּחַרְבַּר. They appear here personified, as Yahweh’s avenging troops. The verse supports personification. The three agents (all appear with the definite article) are the subjects of the verbs, except once when the people are the subject of the verb ‘to die’, this brought about by the sword (חַרְבַּת + def. art. + noun). Deber and Famine are the subject of the verb אָכַל, they devour (literally ‘eat’) the people who are in the city. Vv. 15 and 23 give us a picture of bloodshed and violence. Everywhere, ‘outside’ (// in the country), and ‘inside’ (// in the city), the work of Yahweh’s avenging troops is devastating. The passage describes a destruction left by a conquering (foreign) army, killing all living things, plundering and destroying everything on their way (v. 21). The Sword, Famine and Deber, Terror (¹⁸⁷קִפְזָה, v. 25) and Calamity/Disaster (¹⁸⁸הַנֶּה עַל-הַנֶּה, v. 26) represent this foreign army¹⁸⁹

¹⁸⁵ Ezekiel 1-20, p. 149. Also Biggs, p. 23.

¹⁸⁶ Cf. Exod 32:2-4.

¹⁸⁷ This is a hapax legomenon. Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, argues that this is actually a masc. noun with an archaic unstressed –a ending. The Syriac word q^efada, meaning ‘bristling, stiffening (from terror)’ helps explain its meaning (p. 155).

¹⁸⁸ In Isa 47:11 הַנֶּה appears in // with דְּחַרְבַּר. This is the sense also in Job 6:2, 30; Pss 5:10; 38:13; 52:4; 55:12; 91:3 (with reference to deber); 94:20; Prov 19:13 (BDB, 217:1942; HALOT, 242). Bodi argues that Ezekiel often uses the ‘stylistic device of gradation and amplification of evil and calamity’, e.g. in 6:12; 7:15; 15:7, and he compares it to Mesopotamian examples (pp. 195-196).

¹⁸⁹ Wevers, p. 76 and Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 154, suggest that Nebuchadnezzar’s army is meant here, cf. 30:11-19 (Babylonian army devastating Egypt as a punishment from Yahweh).

who ultimately carry out Yahweh's punishment. The meaning of deber can be the same as in the previous chapter.

5.4.4 Ezekiel 12:16 (1-16)

v. 16

וְהוֹתַרְתִּי מֵהֶם אֲנָשִׁי מִסֶּפֶר מִחֶרֶב מִרְעָב וּמִדָּבָר לְמַעַן יִסְפְּרוּ
אֶת־כָּל־תּוֹעֲבוֹתֵיהֶם בְּגוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר־בָּאוּ שָׁם וַיִּדְעוּ כִּי־אֲנִי יְהוָה:

Greenberg lays out the passage in poetic form with vv. 8, 10 and 16 being prose insertions;¹⁹⁰ other commentators regard the whole chapter as a prose narrative.¹⁹¹ Deber occurs in v. 16, thus in prose.

The chapter divides into three parts, vv. 1-16, vv. 17-20 and vv. 21-28, each introduced by the formula, וַיְהִי דְבַר־יְהוָה אֵלַי לֵאמֹר,¹⁹² Vv. 1-16 take up the theme of exile illustrated through the prophet's symbolic actions as previously in chs 4-5.¹⁹³

Here the prophet is told to pack up his things and go away to another place, acting out the deportation of the people. Greenberg describes the purpose of these acts as being the same as previously, the prophet wants to 'convince his audience that the destruction of Jerusalem and the exile of its inhabitants are inevitable.'¹⁹⁴ His message is to those who are in captivity but who still hope in a speedy return to Jerusalem and trust in the city's strength to withstand the siege.¹⁹⁵ These are frequently referred to as the 'rebellious house', בֵּית־הַמְּרִי,¹⁹⁶ as in 3:26-27.

There are several other links between this and previous oracles. The scattering to the winds and pursuit by the sword in v. 14 is reminiscent of 5:2 and 12; 'their detestable things', אֶת־כָּל־תּוֹעֲבוֹתֵיהֶם, in v. 16 evokes 5:9; because of their idolatry they will ¹⁹⁰ Ezekiel 1-20, pp. 207-208.

¹⁹¹ Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, pp. 265-275; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, pp. 176-177; Clements, Ezekiel, p. 52.

¹⁹² So most commentators; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, sees a bipartite division, taking the two sign-acts in vv. 1-16 and vv. 17-20 together (pp. 174-184).

¹⁹³ Wevers, p. 99; Clements, Ezekiel, pp. 52-53.

¹⁹⁴ Ezekiel 1-20, p. 220.

¹⁹⁵ Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 220; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, p.184; contra Clements, Ezekiel, pp. 53-54 and Biggs, p. 37.

¹⁹⁶ Ezek 12:2; 9, 25; 17:12; 24:3.

be punished. The agents of punishment, the triad of ‘sword, famine and deber’ is another link to complete the common theme of sin and punishment.¹⁹⁷ However, contrary to chs. 7:10-27 and 6:11-14 where there was no mention of survivors of the punishment, here ‘sword, famine and deber’ will not bring complete destruction; a few shall be spared.¹⁹⁸ The 1st p. sg. Hiphil form of the verb יָתַר (וְהוֹתִרְתִּי) emphasizes the fact that Yahweh is in control, he commands his agents. He will spare from Sword, Famine and Deber (appearing in the form of מִן + noun) a few because he has a purpose for them. There will only be remnants in order to testify to their own sin and to the punishment that always follows.¹⁹⁹ Because of the links and similarities with the other passages it is possible that Sword, Famine and Deber are personified here too as the agents of punishment.

5.4.5 Ezekiel 14: 19 and 21

v. 19

אוֹ דְבַר אֲשֶׁלַח אֶל־הָאָרֶץ הִיא וְשִׁפְכֹתַי חֲמַתִּי עָלֶיהָ בְּדָם לְהַכְרִית מִמֶּנָּה אָדָם וּבְהִמָּה:

v. 21

כִּי כֹה אָמַר אֲדֹנָי יְהוִה אֲנִי כִּי־אֲרַבֶּעַת שָׁפְטֵי הָרָעִים חָרַב וְרָעַב וְחַיָּה רָעָה
וְדָבַר שְׁלַחַתִּי אֶל־יְרוּשָׁלַיִם לְהַכְרִית מִמֶּנָּה אָדָם וּבְהִמָּה:

Chapter 14 contains two oracles, vv. 1-11 and vv. 12-23.²⁰⁰ Deber occurs in vv. 19 and 21 thus our discussion is focused on the second oracle.

According to Allen the passage is a ‘proof saying’ characterised by a ‘comparative style of arguing that moves from theoretical situation to a current concern relating to Jerusalem’.²⁰¹

¹⁹⁷ Wong argues that the passages discussed above (pp. 196-217) as well as others in Ezekiel (pp. 217-226) are linked by the theme of sin and punishment of Israel.

¹⁹⁸ LXX and Targ translate deber as ‘death’, the Vg as ‘pestilence’.

¹⁹⁹ Cf. Ezek 5:3; 6:8. Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, p. 274, contra Wevers, p. 102. Also Clements, Ezekiel, p. 55.

²⁰⁰ The first part is taken as part of a larger unit 12:21-14:11 (references in Wong n. 126 p. 102), and the oracle in vv. 12-23 to form a literary unit with the following oracle in 15:1-8 (Wong, p. 103; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, p. 214).

²⁰¹ Ezekiel 1-19, p. 214.

Vv. 12-23 seemingly address a hypothetical nation who sin against Yahweh. However, the previous oracle (vv. 1-11) is directed specifically against Israelites who turned to idolatry. This, and the application of disaster to Jerusalem in v. 22 make it clear that all along the prophet had a specific audience in mind, i.e. Israel.²⁰² Allen argues similarly; he points out that firstly, the presentation of the four scourges are deliberately reminiscent of the curses befalling covenant-breaker Israelites (cf. Lev 26),²⁰³ and secondly, the use of the word מַעַל, ‘to act faithlessly’, which defines sinning here, is used elsewhere²⁰⁴ in reference to Israel.²⁰⁵

The message of the oracle has two parts. The first part, vv. 12-20, sets out a ‘doctrine of retribution’ in legal style, the second part (vv. 21-23) is in ‘ordinary prophetic style’, and it applies the doctrine to Jerusalem.²⁰⁶

Vv. 12-20 present four cases in parallel, each following the same pattern.²⁰⁷

First, the people’s sin and Yahweh’s decision to retaliate are stated in the first half of v. 13.

‘land that sinned against me to commit an act of אָרֶץ כִּי תַחַטָּא-לִי לְמַעַל-מַעַל faithlessness’;

‘I stretch my hand against her’ וְנָטִיתִי יָדִי עָלֶיהָ

This is not repeated but is applied to each of the following sections too.

Second, the manner of retaliation is elaborated, the devastation of the four scourges are described in vivid terms.

v. 13 Yahweh sends famine וְהִשְׁלַחְתִּי-בָהּ רָעָב
v. 15 Yahweh sends (causes to pass) *a being of evil*²⁰⁸ לְוַחֲתִיָּהּ רָעָה אֲעַבִּיר

²⁰² Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, argues that 14:12-23 is independent of 14:1-11 (p. 312). However, they have a common theme which links them, sin-punishment. The first oracle describes the sin against Yahweh, idolatry; the second relates the punishment that follows. See discussion of previous chapters.

²⁰³ Wong also argues for the parallel with Lev 26 (pp. 103-106), and Wevers points to similarities with Jer 14:19-15:4 (pp. 114-115).

²⁰⁴ E.g. 2 Chron 26:16-18; 29:19; 36:14; Josh 7:1; Ezek 17:18; Lev 26:40; Num 31:16.

²⁰⁵ Ezekiel 1-19, p. 217. He further argues that ‘Though the text shows clear signs of speaking about Israel, the facade of universalism is maintained by mentioning three non-Israelite saints, Noah, Daniel and Job.’

²⁰⁶ Wevers, p. 114; Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 260; Biggs, p. 45.

²⁰⁷ Greenberg, Ezekiel 1-20, p. 260; Allen, Ezekiel 1-19, p. 217; Wevers, pp. 115-116.

v.17 Yahweh brings sword

חָרֵב אָבִיא

v.19 Yahweh sends deber

דָּבַר אֲשַׁלַּח

(blood also appears, through blood(shed) Yahweh will pour out his wrath)

The intensity of Yahweh's anger is suggested by the intensive forms of the verbs (three Hiphil and one Piel) used. The destruction that follows is terrible. Yahweh's agents of punishment kill every living thing, human and animal (vv. 13, 17, 19); leave the land childless and desolate (v. 15). That Yahweh takes responsibility for the slaughter is clear from the 1st person verbs that attribute the killing to Yahweh in two cases. In the first and third case (vv. 13 and 17) we have the same phrase repeated, וְהִכַּרְתִּי מִמֶּנָּה אָדָם וּבְהֵמָה, 'I shall destroy (from it) man and animal'. In v. 19 the same expression appears with a slight variation suggesting that although Yahweh is ultimately responsible, he carries out the destruction through his agents. This is clear from v. 15 where the Piel verb וְשָׂכַלְתָּהּ is a 3rd person feminine singular verb relating the act of 'leaving childless' to the feminine singular noun חַיִּיהָ רָעָה, and from v. 21 where it is stated explicitly that Yahweh sends his four scourges to destroy humans and animals.

Third, the conclusion states the finality of the punishment; not even Noah, Daniel or Job would be able to intercede on behalf of anyone but themselves.

All four cases contain the expression/formula 'declaration of the lord Yahweh', נְאֻם יְהוָה (vv. 14, 16, 18 and 20), and except for the first one, they are preceded by a divine oath, 'As I live', חַי־אָנִי. This formula emphasises the fact that Yahweh's decision to destroy the people is final, no one can make him go back on it.

Vv. 21-23 apply the punishment to Jerusalem. Yahweh sends (שְׁלַחְתִּי) his four agents, lit. 'judgements'²⁰⁹ (אַרְבַּעַת שְׁפֹטֵי הָרָעִים), bringers of evil in the sense of destruction and disaster. These are the same four as introduced in vv. 13, 15, 17 and 19, but in a different order, חָרֵב וְרָעַב וְחַיִּיהָ רָעָה וְדָבַר. The nouns are listed without definite articles. Here the חַיִּיהָ רָעָה appear as one of the four agents not as a general designation of the others. The verbs used in connection with them (וְהִשְׁלַחְתִּי; וְהִכַּרְתִּי; וְשָׂכַלְתָּהּ; וְשַׁלַּחְתִּי) again suggest personification, although Yahweh is the ²⁰⁸ Modern Bible translations have 'wild beasts', Vg bestias pessimas, 'evil beasts' (also JPS); LXX has θηρια πονηρα, 'evil wild beasts'. Targ similarly to MT has an ambiguous חַיִּיהָ בְּשֵׁתָא.

²⁰⁹ As in 5:12 שֹׁפֵט is used here in the sense of 'punishment'; thus these four agents are the 'punishers' who carry out the punishment (evil) from Yahweh.

J. Blair 5. Deber

subject and the Hiphil form strongly suggests that he controls or commands them. Their task is to carry out Yahweh's punishment, destroying every living thing, human and animal (לְהַכְרִית מִמִּנְהָ אָדָם וּבְהֵמָה), the expression from v. 19 is repeated here.

The punishment against Jerusalem on the one hand is said to be worse than what has been described earlier; on the other hand it leaves more hope than before. Whereas in vv. 12-20 not even 'sons and daughters' of the three righteous men are spared, v. 22 states that some 'sons and daughters' will be left to survive.

5.4.6 Ezekiel 28:23

v. 23
וְשִׁלַּחְתִּי-בָהּ דִּבְרַר נְדָם בְּחַוְצוֹתֶיהָ וְנִפְלַל חָלָל בְּתוֹכָהּ בְּחָרַב עָלֶיהָ מִסָּבִיב וַיִּדְעוּ
כִּי-אֲנִי יְהוָה:

The passage of 28:20-26 is different from the ones discussed above as the oracle it contains is directed not against Israel but against one of her enemies, in this case, Sidon.²¹⁰ Commentators note the lack of accusation. There is no reason given why Yahweh is against Sidon, there is simply an announcement of punishment.²¹¹ However, as Greenberg rightly argues, the fact that the recognition formula ('they shall know that I am Yahweh') occurs so often, four times in five verses, strongly hints at the oracle's 'chief concern';²¹² Yahweh has to be acknowledged as lord of all not only by Israel but by all nations.²¹³ Although there is no direct accusation of Sidon at the beginning of the oracle, the motive of punishment becomes clear in ²¹⁰ L. C. Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, WBC 29 (Dallas: Word Books, 1990) characterizes the passage (vv. 20-26) as being a 'literary finale' to the whole chapter as there are obvious links to the preceding part (e.g. the use of the terms יָשָׁב and חָלָל). He also argues that the passage echoes earlier as well as later chapters. For example שָׁאֵט recalls 25:6,15; 28:21 recalls 25:2; 28:22 points to 26:3; vv.25-26 are similar to the closing verses of ch. 39; similarities with 34:25-30 and chs 36-37 have also been pointed out (pp. 98-99). Bodi points out that the term שָׁאֵט is unique to Ezek (appears 6x); he uses it consistently to denote the other nations' contempt towards Judah and Israel. See discussion of this term and its Akkadian parallel on pp. 69-81.

²¹¹ Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 98; D. I. Block, The Book of Ezekiel: Chapters 25-48 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998), p. 121 n.1; Biggs, p. 88.

²¹² M. Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, AB 22A (New York: Doubleday, 1997), p. 596.

²¹³ Block, p. 121.

J. Blair 5. Deber

v. 24. The sin of Israel’s neighbours, and thus Sidon’s, was the show of contempt toward Israel and thus toward her God.

Although the oracle is a short one it contains many shifts in style and content, thus commentators argue that it is made up of a number of short proof sayings.²¹⁴

Vv. 21-22 introduce the oracle with the usual formula as prose; then vv. 22 and 23 present the oracle in poetic form as Yahweh’s speech in 1st person. Vv. 24-26 revert to prose again.²¹⁵

v. 22b contain a statement that Yahweh is against Sidon, the following relate the consequences of this fact. Vv. 22c-f are in an abb’a’ form.

v. 22c I shall be honoured in your midst	וְנִכְבְּדֹתִי בְּתוֹכָךְ
v. 22d and they shall know that I am Yahweh	וַיֵּדְעוּ כִּי־אֲנִי יְהוָה
v. 22e when I make judgement in her	בְּעֲשׂוֹתִי בָּהּ שְׁפָטִים
v. 22f and I shall be holy in her.	וְנִקְדְּשָׁתִי בָּהּ :
v. 23.a I shall send deber and dam in her streets	וְשִׁלַּחְתִּי־בָּהּ דְּבַר וְדָם בְּחֻצוֹתֶיהָ
v. 23b and the slain shall fall in her midst	וְנִפְלְלוּ חָלָל בְּתוֹכָהּ
v. 23c with sword against her round about	בְּחֶרֶב עָלֶיהָ מִסָּבִיב
v. 23d and they shall know that I am Yahweh.	וַיֵּדְעוּ כִּי־אֲנִי יְהוָה :

The punishment in v. 23 is brought about by Yahweh’s agents of death, דְּבַר וְדָם, and חֶרֶב. ‘Famine’ is missing. The cluster of terms connected with warfare (דָּם, חֶרֶב, וְנִפְלְלוּ חָלָל) indicate that the emphasis is on death caused by war, thus for deber a more general meaning is required.²¹⁶ Modern Bible translations and commentators give ‘plague’ (NIV, NJB, Greenberg, Allen) or ‘pestilence’ (JPS, RSV, Wevers, Block). ‘Plague’, in the general sense of ‘plagues of war’ is possible. The close connection of the term with דָּם, ‘blood’, and the following terms make it unlikely that ‘pestilence’ is meant here. We suggest ‘destruction’. Yahweh sends (Piel of שִׁלַּח) his agents to deliver his punishment. It is possible to regard these three agents as personifications of the horrors of war; the use of the verb שִׁלַּח with דְּבַר וְדָם without the object marker supports this suggestion.

²¹⁴ E.g. Block, ‘a series’ (pp. 121-122); Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, ‘two’ (p. 596); Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, ‘a collection’ (p. 98); Wevers argues for the ‘composite nature’ of the section (p. 219).

²¹⁵ Block, p. 122.

²¹⁶ Both LXX and Targ translate deber as usual by ‘death’; Vg has pestilentia.

5.4.7 Ezekiel 33:27 (33: 23-29)

v. 27

כֹּה־תֹאמַר אֲלֵהֶם כֹּה־אָמַר אֲדָנָי יְהוִה חַי־אֲנִי אִם־לֹא אֲשֶׁר בְּחַרְבוֹת בְּחָרַב יַפְלוּ
וְאֲשֶׁר עַל־פְּנֵי הַשָּׂדֶה לַחַיָּה נִתְּתִיו לְאֹכְלוֹ וְאֲשֶׁר בַּמְצָדוֹת וּבַמְעָרוֹת בְּדָבָר יָמוּתוּ:

Most commentators treat chapter 33 as comprising two distinct literary units, vv. 1-20 and vv. 21-33.²¹⁷ The second part of the chapter in turn is made up of three parts, vv. 21-22 is an autobiographical note that is followed by two separate oracles, vv. 23-29 and vv. 30-33.²¹⁸ Deber occurs in v. 27, thus the discussion will be limited to the first oracle, vv. 23-29.

According to Block the oracle has a ‘hybrid’ form; it displays the characteristics of both the proof-saying and the dispute oracle.²¹⁹ It can be divided as follows: v. 23 introduces the oracle in the usual manner, vv. 24-26 present the accusation, vv. 27-28 pronounce the judgement and finally v. 29 contains the recognition formula.

The issue in the oracle seems to be around the possession of the land.²²⁰ A false hope seemed to have prevailed amongst those who stayed behind in Judah, thinking that this showed God’s favour towards them as opposed to God’s judgement/rejection of those who were taken into exile. These people did not learn the ‘lessons of the exile’, argues Allen, that to stay in Jerusalem and in the land of Judah in fact means death.²²¹ Their false hope shows their lack of understanding and it only evokes ²¹⁷ Wevers, pp. 249-256; Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, pp. 179-202; Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, pp. 671-692; Block, pp. 234-268, esp. p. 236; Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, pp. 140-154, esp. p. 151. Clements, Ezekiel, sees three ‘separate passages about Ezekiel’s work as a prophet’ (p. 151).

²¹⁸ Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, regards the two oracles as unrelated (p. 197), while Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, sees rhetorical parallels between them. He also points to a ‘larger structuring’ of the whole chapter (p. 151).

²¹⁹ The characteristics of proof sayings are: motivation (vv. 24-26); pronouncement of judgement (vv. 27-28); recognition formula (v. 29). Those of the disputation oracles are: thesis (through a popular saying, v. 24); dispute (vv. 25-26); counter-thesis (vv. 28-29). See Block, p. 258; Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 151; Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, pp. 197-198.

²²⁰ Block, p. 259; Biggs, p. 106.

²²¹ Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 153; Biggs, p. 107. This was Jeremiah’s message too in 21:8-10; 24:1-10; 27; 28; 29 and 38. Clements’ argument is slightly different; he asserts that by their disobedience the people of Jerusalem forfeited their privileged position as the chosen remnant of Israel. This position now belongs to the exiles (Ezekiel, p. 153).

J. Blair 5. Deber

contempt from Yahweh towards them.²²² The expression יְשֵׁבֵי הַחֲרָבוֹת הָאֵלֶּה shows this.²²³

The people of Judah use the example of Abraham to justify their hope (cf. Gen 15:7, 8; Exod 6:8). Their reasoning is presented as an a fortiori argument.²²⁴

v. 24

Abraham was only one (person), yet he possessed the land;
but we are many
to us the land was given to possess it

אֶחָד הָיָה אַבְרָהָם
וַיִּירֶשׂ אֶת־הָאָרֶץ
וְאֲנַחְנוּ רַבִּים
לָנוּ נִתְּנָה הָאָרֶץ לְמוֹרָשָׁה:

There is logic in their reasoning (note the use of the same verb, יִרֶשׁ). However, there is a problem with the people's attitude. Not only are they ignorant of the covenant that Yahweh made with Abraham, as a result of which he received the gift of the land, but they also display great insolence towards Yahweh by 'underestimating the patriarch's significance and overestimating their own'.²²⁵

The prophet's refutation of the people's argument is introduced by לְכֵן, 'therefore', signalling the importance of what is to follow. Spoken through the prophet's mouth Yahweh's words of accusation come as a series of formal charges.²²⁶ These charges are addressed directly to the people in 2nd plural verb forms (5 masculine and 1 feminine).

v. 25:

you eat over blood²²⁷
you lift up your eyes to your idols and you shed blood (pour out)

עַל־הַדָּם תֹּאכְלוּ
עֵינֵיכֶם תִּשְׂאוּ אֶל־גְּלוּלֵיכֶם
וְדָם תִּשְׁפְּכוּ

²²² Block points out that the oracle presents Yahweh's response to the territorial claims not Ezekiel's (p. 259).

²²³ Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, takes הָאֵלֶּה to refer to the whole phrase, 'these inhabitants of ruins', rather than to the following word only, 'these ruins' (p. 684). 'These' is missing from the LXX.

²²⁴ Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, p. 684; Block, p. 259.

²²⁵ Block, p. 260.

²²⁶ Block points out that each of these charges is familiar from former prophecies, e.g. chs 5-6, 18 and 22 (p. 261 and n. 112 on that page).

²²⁷ Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, argues convincingly that 'eating over blood' is related to idolatry cf. Lev 19:26 (p. 684).

v. 26

you stand by your swords²²⁸
you commit²²⁹ abominations and each defiles his fellow's wife

עַמְדַתְּם עַל־חַרְבְּכֶם
עֲשִׂיתֶן תּוֹעֵבָה
וְאִישׁ אֶת־אִשְׁתּוֹ רֵעֵהוּ טִמְאַתֶּם

The people are guilty of: eating over blood and worshipping idols; murder and violence; abominations and adultery. The gravity of the charges is emphasised by the fact that each is addressed twice in parallel expressions (eating over blood // lifting up the eyes to idols; shedding of blood // standing by the sword; committing abominations // defiling each other's wife).

Accusation is followed by announcement of punishment (vv. 27-28). There were three charges against the people, now there is a threefold division of the people about to be punished, and three agents of punishment.

v. 27

those who are in the ruins by sword shall fall;
who is in the field to the hayya I shall give to devour (him); וְאִשֵּׁר עַל־פְּנֵי הַשָּׂדֶה לַחַיָּה נָתַתִּיו לְאָכְלוֹ those who are in the strongholds and caves by deber shall die.

וְאִשֵּׁר בְּמִצְרוֹת וּבְמַעְרוֹת בְּדֶבֶר יָמוּתוּ :

It is interesting to note that the agents of punishment are different from the usual; 'famine' is missing, and hayya appears without the usual qualifying 'of evil'. Commentators usually translate it as 'wild animals/beasts',²³⁰ mainly because of its occurrence with הַשָּׂדֶה,²³¹ and the connection with Lev 26:22, 25.²³² This is possible

²²⁸ Literally, 'stand on your swords'; an expression that does not occur elsewhere (Block, p. 261 n. 116). Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37 translates 'you live by your swords', taking עַמְדַת in the sense of 'exist' (p. 685). Similarly Wevers (p. 255), Block (p. 257) and Allen (Ezekiel 20-48, p. 149) interpret the expression as 'you rely on/ resort to your swords'. The context supports such translations. The phrase refers to living violently.

²²⁹ The verb is 2 fem. pl. This, according to Greenberg might be a scribal error (Ezekiel 21-37, p. 685). He further argues that the expression עֲשִׂיתֶן תּוֹעֵבָה, 'you commit abominations' here is best taken to refer to 'sexual immorality' (cf. 22:11; Lev 18:26-30) rather than idolatry (as is usual in Ezekiel, e.g. 8:6, 9). Indeed, Greenberg's suggestion is supported by the context here. The charges are presented in parallel expressions; עֲשִׂיתֶן תּוֹעֵבָה // וְאִישׁ אֶת־אִשְׁתּוֹ טִמְאַתֶּם, 'and each defiles his fellow's wife', requiring the sense of sexual offence for 'abominations'.

²³⁰ So Wevers, p. 255; Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, p. 685; Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 153; Block, p. 262, modern Bible versions and Vg. LXX also adds 'of the field'.

²³¹ Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, p. 685.

(cf. Jer 40:7). However, we suggest a different interpretation, namely that as in previous occurrences (e.g. 5:16-17; 14:15), here too, hayya is to be taken in a general sense referring to any of Yahweh's agents, bringers of 'evil'. This suggestion finds support in the way v. 27 is presented. While falling by sword and dying by deber have plural subjects, those who are in the ruins and those who are in the strongholds and caves respectively, the subject of the middle phrase is Yahweh himself; the object is also in the singular, 'I shall give him' / 'to devour him', as is the recipient, 'to the hayya (i.e. my agent)'. The whole phrase is in the singular perhaps because it is to be taken in a general sense. The locations: ruins, field, strongholds and caves emphasise the all-encompassing nature of the punishment, that there is no place where anyone can hide from Yahweh's agents, rather than a link with the instrument of punishment (i.e. field – beasts).²³³ These agents of Yahweh are presented here personified, and the emphasis is on the destruction and death that they cause; the nature of the death is secondary. Exodus 5:3 presents the Israelites running into the desert and sacrificing to Yahweh, scared of meeting his two agents, hereb and deber. These two agents are pursuing the fugitives here too. The translation of deber as 'plague/pestilence' is possible but the more general 'disease' is preferable;²³⁴ sword could either stand for war or as in Exod 5:3 for a violent death in general.²³⁵ As argued above, the emphasis is not on the nature but on the fact of death, that these 'beings' are agents of Yahweh and they bring his punishment which is deadly.

5.4.8 Ezekiel 38:22

v. 22

וְנִשְׁפָּטְתִי אֶתְּךָ בְּדֶבֶר וּבַדָּם וְנָשָׂם שׁוֹטֵף וְאֶבְנֵי אֶלְנָבִישׁ אֵשׁ וְנִפְרִית אֲמַטִּיר עָלָיו
וְעַל־אֲנָפְיוֹ וְעַל־עַמִּים רַבִּים אֲשֶׁר אֶתּוֹ:

The final occurrence of deber in Ezekiel is in chapter 38 v. 22.

²³² Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 153.

²³³ Contra Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, p. 685.

²³⁴ JPS, RSV and Vg translate 'pestilence'; NJB; NIV; Greenberg; Zimmerli; Allen and Block have 'plague'. LXX and Targ give the more general meaning of 'death'.

²³⁵ See 5.5.1 below.

Chapters 38-39 form a literary unit that is in the form of a prophecy against Gog dealing with the theme of Israel's punishment (in the form of invasion and exile) and her future restoration. The text is extremely complex and scholars disagree as to whether it is made up of several oracles²³⁶ or if it is a single oracle that can be further subdivided.²³⁷ Some scholars characterise this prophetic oracle as (proto-) apocalyptic.²³⁸ However, Block has shown that it does not fit the definition of 'apocalyptic' as given by J. J. Collins.²³⁹ Block argues further that the 'Gog pericope' should be regarded as a 'single powerful proof oracle' consisting of a 'series of fragmentary proof sayings' (p. 428). The oracle is outstanding because of its lively imagery, and this has led Block to warn against a too literal interpretation of it. He argues that the oracle is best regarded as 'a satirical literary cartoon strip'. He writes (p. 431):

For sheer vividness, imagery, and hyperbole, this oracle has few equals, which cautions against overliteralism in interpretation. One may best appreciate the intention of this text by approaching it as a satirical literary cartoon strip consisting of eight frames.

Block is followed by Rentz.²⁴⁰ However, we shall attempt to show that to regard this oracle as a satirical writing is missing the author's intention in his use of this imagery.²⁴¹

The oracle is presented in the form of a direct speech by Yahweh, addressing the prophet (38:1-2; 14a; 39:1a; 17a), Gog (38:3-13; 14b-17; 39:1b-5), the birds and wild animals (39:17b-20) and a general audience, i.e. the nations and Israel (38:18-23; 39:6-16; 21-29). After the usual opening formula the prophet is asked to set his

²³⁶ Seven, according to Taylor and Stuart (based on the number of times the messenger formula is repeated, in 38:3, 10, 14, 17; 39:1, 17, 25); four according to Parunak (quoted in Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 202).

²³⁷ Some scholars identify a core and further later additions to the text; thus Wevers reduces the original oracle to 39:1-4, 6, with all the rest being expansions/commentaries on this (see pp. 283-286 esp. p. 286). Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, divides the text into three (original) 'strophes', 38:1-9; 39:1-5 and 17-20 (pp. 296-299). Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, discusses several scholars' positions, and agrees with Zimmerli in a three-fold division of the oracle (pp. 202-204). Similarly, Biggs, p. 121 and McKeating, Ezekiel, OT Guides (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993), pp. 117-122. Block follows Odell who has a 'holistic approach' to the text in chs 38-39 (pp. 424-427).

²³⁸ Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 210; Craigie, Ezekiel, p. 266. See also references in Block, p. 427.

²³⁹ For reference see Block, p. 428 n. 15. Block writes that the symbolic elements are 'a far cry from the elaborate symbolism of Daniel or of the NT book of Revelation' (p. 428).

²⁴⁰ T. Rentz, The Rhetorical Function of the Book of Ezekiel, VT Supp (Leiden: Brill, 1999), p.117.

²⁴¹ See below, p. 162.

face towards Gog and prophesy against him.²⁴² The identity of Gog has been long debated and no consensus has been reached.²⁴³ However, the emphasis is not on his identity but on the way he is presented, a great and powerful leader²⁴⁴ with a mighty army²⁴⁵ and numerous allies.²⁴⁶ V. 7 starts as a summons to battle, the two imperative verbs (Niphil and Hiphil of כִּיֵּן) give a sense of urgency and at the same time with the addition of a third Niphil verb form (קָהַל) emphasize the fact that these instructions come from Yahweh; he is in command. We have the vivid image of a great army assembled, all in battle gear, ready to invade, waiting only for the word of command. Thus the delay in v. 8 comes somewhat as a surprise. The time of the attack is uncertain; it only happens ‘after many days’ (מִיָּמִים רַבִּים), ‘in later years’ (בְּאַחֲרֵית הַשָּׁנִים). However, the fact that it will happen is sure, ‘you shall be mustered’ (תִּפְקָד), ‘you shall go against’ (תִּבּוֹא אֵלַי). The first part of v. 9 makes use of similes (‘as a devastation’, כְּשֹׂאָה; ‘as a cloud’, כְּעָנָן) and parallelism (‘you shall go up’, וְעָלִיתָ; ‘you shall go in’, תִּבּוֹא) to illustrate the devastating and all-encompassing nature of the attack (‘covering the land’, לְכַסּוֹת הָאָרֶץ), while the second part again emphasises the greatness of the invading army (‘you, and all your army and the many people with you’, אַתָּה וְכָל־אֲנָפֶיךָ וְעַמִּים רַבִּים אִתְּךָ).

²⁴² Biggs points out that the turning of the prophet towards a place/person is a way of expressing Yahweh’s opposition towards that place/person, cf. 6:2; 25:2; 28:21 (p. 121). NIV’s translation, ‘Son of Man, set your face against Gog...’ conveys this sense. Indeed, the call to ‘prophecy against him’ makes it clear that this is the intended meaning.

²⁴³ Most scholars regard Gyges, king of Lydia as being the most probable (Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, p. 301; Block, p. 433; McKeating, Ezekiel, p. 115; Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 204) but other possibilities have also been suggested. For a discussion see Zimmerli, pp. 299-302; McKeating, p. 115 and Block, p. 433 n. 31.

²⁴⁴ The expression נְשִׂיא רֹאשׁ מְשָׁדָה וְתִבְלָל is also problematic; LXX took ראש as a place name and this led to some interesting conjectures (Russia) in trying to identify it. Most scholars agree that it is best to take ראש as a common noun referring to נְשִׂיא, and thus the phrase translates, ‘prince, chief of Meshech and Tubal’. So Wevers, p. 287; Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, p. 305; Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 199 n. 2a; Biggs, p. 121; P. C. Craigie, Ezekiel (Edinburgh: St. Andrews Press, 1983), p. 265; Block, p. 433. Meshech and Tubal appear in Ezek 27:13 in a listing of Tyre’s trade partners; in 32:26 among the slain by sword, allies of Egypt. Both are also attested in ANE sources (Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 204; Block, pp. 435- 436 and n. 47, 48).

²⁴⁵ V. 4b describes Gog’s army as well dressed (לְבָשֵׁי מְקַלּוֹל) and armed, with horses (סוּסִים) and horsemen (וּפָרָשִׁים), carrying defensive as well as offensive weapons (‘buckler and shield’, וּמָגֵן, ‘sword’, חֶרֶב). According to Block the expression כָּל־חַיְלֶיךָ, ‘your entire army’ refers not only to the ‘inventory of military hardware’ of Gog’s army but also to his allies (p. 439).

²⁴⁶ For a discussion on Gog’s five allies, פָּרַס כּוּשׁ וּפּוּט, גְּמָר, and בֵּית הַתּוֹנֵר מֵהָרְמָה see commentaries, e.g. Wevers, p. 287; Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, p. 306; Block, pp. 439-440 and notes.

These verses illustrate Gog and his great army as powerful and feared by many nations, and yet they are mere puppets in Yahweh's hands. They act as and when he commands (vv. 7-8, 9; 15-16). He even puts the thoughts into their minds (vv. 10-12).²⁴⁷ Gog and his army are instruments of Yahweh.²⁴⁸

The object of Gog and his army's attack first appears in v. 8 as 'the mountains of Israel'. It is not named directly at first but is described as a land that was desolate for long but now has recovered from war, a people that returned from exile. People and land seem to be used interchangeably.²⁴⁹ This reference to the suffering of the people shows Yahweh's caring and compassion, and this also becomes clear later when Yahweh's anger arises as a result of the actual attack on Israel by Gog's army (vv. 18-22). Vv. 11-13 present a resettled nation, living peacefully and oblivious of danger.²⁵⁰ When they least expect it, the attack will come. The description of the invasion is a summary of vv. 4-9. It is striking that the object of the attack is now referred to explicitly as 'my people Israel', עַמִּי יִשְׂרָאֵל (v. 14, 16) and the land as 'my land', אֶרְצִי (v. 16).²⁵¹ This may point forward to the coming severe punishment of Gog for attacking Israel. Although Gog and his army acted only as Yahweh's agents their action rouses Yahweh to great anger. This is interesting because this was not the only time that Yahweh used foreign rulers/nations as his agents to punish Israel. Nebuchadrezzar appeared frequently in Jeremiah's prophecies as Yahweh's agent (e.g. 21:7; 'my servant' in 27:6; 32:16-23). Elsewhere we have the Assyrian king.²⁵² However, perhaps it is significant that in the cases mentioned Yahweh used these foreigners to punish Israel for turning away from him, whereas in the present case there is no mention of Israel sinning against Yahweh and Gog and his army acting as bringers of punishment. Israel had already been punished

²⁴⁷ Block asserts that Yahweh directly and deliberately manipulates Gog (p. 438). Also Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 205; Craigie, Ezekiel, p. 269; Biggs, p. 122. Wevers on the other hand holds that v. 10 presents Gog as the one devising the plan to attack 'defenceless people' (p. 288). Similarly Clements, Ezekiel, views vv. 10-16 as unfolding the 'evil plans of Gog' (p. 172). Later however, speaking of 39:1-16, he does confirm that 'Gog's attack is allowed to take place under the hand of God, who is secretly controlling the battle and its outcome.' (p. 175)

²⁴⁸ Block, p. 444.

²⁴⁹ Block, p. 444.

²⁵⁰ This depiction of Israel points to the fulfilment of earlier promises in 34:26-27; 36:10 (Allen, Ezekiel 20-48, p. 206; Block, p. 447).

²⁵¹ Block, p. 450.

²⁵² Isa 28: 2. See 6.5.

(was in exile), the description of idyllic life after resettlement suggests that her relationship with Yahweh has been restored. The purpose (expressed by לְמַעַן) of all this becomes clear from v. 16b; through Gog Yahweh shall show his holiness to all the nations,

לְמַעַן יֵדַעַת הַגּוֹיִם אֶתִּי בְּהַקְדָּשִׁי בְּיַד לְעֵינֵיהֶם גּוֹג:

Gog and his army are agents and instruments in Yahweh's hands at the same time.²⁵³ Through their punishment Yahweh's holiness, power and might will be clear to all nations.²⁵⁴ The punishment parallels the great wrath of Yahweh which is described with emphatic terms and vivid imagery in vv. 18-20, 'my hot anger shall arise' (תַּעֲלֶה חַמְתִּי בְּאַפִּי, v. 18), a great earthquake (רַעַשׁ גָּדוֹל, v. 19), shall result from 'my zeal and the fire of my wrath' (וּבִקְנֹאתִי בְּאֵשׁ-עֲבָרְתִּי, v. 19), all living things ('fish of the sea', דְּגַיִּי הַיָּם, 'birds of the sky', וְעוֹף הַשָּׁמַיִם, 'animals of the field', וְכָל-הַרְמֵשׁ הָאֲדָמָה, 'all creeping things creeping on the earth', וְכָל-הָאָדָם אֲשֶׁר עַל-פְּנֵי הָאָרֶץ, v. 20) will tremble at Yahweh's presence (וְרָעַשׁוּ מִפְּנֵי). Not only the living things but nature itself shall be affected by Yahweh's presence (second half of v. 20); mountains shall be thrown down (וְנִפְּלוּ הַהָרִים), steep places shall fall (וְנִפְּלוּ הַתְּלָמֹת), walls shall fall down to the earth (וְכָל-חוֹמָה לְאֶרֶץ תִּפּוֹל).²⁵⁵ This is the description of the mighty and powerful warrior-king Yahweh who appears now to execute judgement i.e. to punish.²⁵⁶ It is Yahweh against Gog, Yahweh's warriors:

²⁵³ Contra Block who writes (p. 451), '...Gog is not actually the agent through whom his (Yahweh's) holiness is manifested; he is the locus of the revelation!' Further, he argues that Gog cannot be Yahweh's agent because he is not commissioned by Yahweh to act as his agent of punishment. 'How could Yahweh announce in one breath that Gog is his agent, and in the next vent his wrath on Gog with such fury?' (pp. 455-456) However, even though Gog is not commissioned to punish Israel, it is clear that he is brought against Israel by Yahweh (v. 16: 'I will bring you against my land...') whether he knows or not that Yahweh pulls his strings, he is still a puppet. Yahweh has a purpose with Gog and his army and their attack on Israel as this serves as a reason for their punishment. Through the punishment Yahweh can manifest his might and glory to all the nations. We can see a parallel in the story of David and the census in 2 Sam 24 where Yahweh incited David to do the census and then punished him for doing it. He sent one of his agents of punishment, deber, clearly identified there as an angel. See below, 5.5.6. This theme was also known in the ancient Near East. Renz draws attention to the parallel of the Gog pericope and the Cuthean Legend of Naram-Sin. He writes: 'The central idea of both the Cuthean Legend and Ezek 38-39 is that the enemy is defeated by divine intervention and not by human forces. The same gods (or God) who had unleashed the dark forces, destroy(s) them.' (pp. 117-118)

²⁵⁴ Renz, pp. 119-120.

²⁵⁵ Isa 2:12-17; 29:6; Ezek 38:19; Zech 14:5, etc.

²⁵⁶ The Niphal form of the verb is used in the sense of carrying out the sentence (Block, p. 459).

J. Blair 5. Deber

Sword, Deber and Dam, Rain, Hailstones, Fire and Brimstone, a series of personified natural forces, against the army and all the nations that are with Gog. There can be no question as to the outcome.²⁵⁷

V. 22 enlists seven agents through whom the punishment is carried out. The number seven highlights the totality of the punishment,²⁵⁸ it also reminds us of the seven 'arrows' or 'evils' of Yahweh in Deut 32:24. It is argued there that these forces are personifications. The cosmic scale of the punishment and the reference to 'that day' (i.e. the day of Yahweh) are suggestive of a holy war context,²⁵⁹ and thus it is easy to regard the agents enlisted here too as personifications of destructive forces, as members of Yahweh's army. Natural elements such as Hail (barad) and Mighty Waters also appear as personified destructive forces in Isa 28.²⁶⁰

This leads us back to the point made earlier that the text is not a satirical writing. The imagery used serves a clear purpose. Zimmerli characterised the language of this pericope as 'lively', neither prose nor 'tightly controlled speech'. 'Rather it reveals the character of a rhythmical elevated prose, in which there appear two-stress and three-stress lines which occasionally connected in clear parallelism without being linked by fixed laws into a metrically self-contained whole.'²⁶¹ We suggest that perhaps it is better to regard this text as poetical; the symbolism, the personifications, similes, parallelisms would fall into place.

It is not possible to determine a specific meaning for deber. Along with Sword, Dam (bloodshed), Rain and other personified natural forces, it is presented as one of Yahweh's warriors, one of his agents of punishment. A general sense of 'destruction' is suited to the context.

²⁵⁷ Clements, Ezekiel, is reminded of the account of the defeat of Sennacherib's army outside Jerusalem by the angel of Yahweh in 2 Kings 19:35, and in a broader sense he sees here a description of a final conflict between the forces of good and evil (p. 173).

²⁵⁸ Block, p. 459.

²⁵⁹ Zimmerli, Ezekiel 2, p. 313.

²⁶⁰ See discussion in 6.5.

²⁶¹ Ezekiel 2, p. 299.

5.4.9 Summary of occurrences of deber in Ezekiel

Examining all the occurrences of deber in the Book of Ezekiel the following can be concluded. Deber occurs 11x in Ezekiel; 5x as the triad known from Jeremiah, deber, famine and sword, although the order varies.²⁶² Contrary to Jeremiah, Ezekiel does not use this triad consistently. In some cases a different element (dam in 28:23 and hayyah in 33:27) replaces famine. A fourth element appears in 14:19²⁶³ and 21; v. 21 speaks of Yahweh's four dreadful scourges (אֲרִבְעַת שְׁפָטֵי הָרָעִים), the fourth being the hayya ra'ah. This is commonly translated as 'wild animals' but we have shown that a more literal translation as 'beings of evil' meaning Yahweh's agents who bring destruction upon the people is more suited to the contexts. In 5:17 dam appears as the fifth element closely connected to deber (וְדָבַר יָדָם); it appears also in this form in 28:23 but there as the third element), and in 38:22 it is one of seven forces.

The passages in which deber occurs are all prophetic oracles and most of them are written in poetic style.²⁶⁴ Four times deber appears as an absolute noun (5:17; 14:19 and 21; 28:23); in all cases Yahweh 'sends' (שָׁלַח) it. Most often, however, it appears with the definite article preceded by the preposition בְּ-,²⁶⁵ in which cases the preposition is taken instrumentally. It is unlikely that the nouns are proper nouns, rather the fact that they appear with, as well as without, the definite article points to the fact that they designate Yahweh's agents who are personified abstract nouns or natural forces. Their 'name' designates their function and does not point to them as individuals.

We have argued for a personification of deber and the other agents in all of the passages. This was supported by the verbs related to them and their immediate context. In every case deber as an agent of Yahweh brings punishment. Although mostly total destruction is envisaged, the possibility of survival is also introduced. A remnant will be kept (12:16; 14:19, 21). Yahweh's punishment is mostly directed ²⁶² In 5:12: 'deber, famine, sword'; in 6:11 and 12:16: 'sword, famine, deber'; in 6:12: 'deber, sword, famine'; and in 7:15: 'sword, deber, famine'.

²⁶³ Strictly speaking in v. 19 deber appears alone, but 'famine' in v. 13; hayyah ra'ah in v. 15, and 'sword' in v. 17 are connected to it.

²⁶⁴ So chs 6,7, 12, 28 and possibly 38. Chs 14 and 33 are characterised as 'proof sayings'. Ch. 5 describes the prophet's symbolic actions and relays its interpretation.

²⁶⁵ 5x as בְּ- + def. art. + noun (5:12; 6:11, 12: 28:23; 33:27), 1x with the definite article alone (7:15). 1x it appears as בְּ- + noun (38:22) and 1x with the preposition מִן- as prep. + noun (12:16).

against Israel but twice other nations are also mentioned as the objects of his wrath: in 28:23 Yahweh speaks against Sidon and in 38:22 against Gog, king of Magog. Here other natural elements also occur, such as torrential rain, hailstones, fire and brimstone, all personified as Yahweh's mighty army.

Some of the verbs that occur with deber are the same as in Jeremiah, for example various forms of מוֹת, 'to die'; כָּלָה, 'to finish'; באו, 'to bring in', and שָׁלַח, 'to send'. Similarly to Jeremiah, here too, when the people are the subject of the sentence, they will die by deber (5:12; 6:11, 12; 33:27) and be finished by the other agents. They will also 'fall' (נָפַל) especially by the sword (5:12; 6:11, 12; 33:27). Contrary to Jeremiah here deber also appears as the subject of the sentence; it passes over (עָבַר, 5:17) and devours (אָכַל, 7:15) the people. That the activity of these agents is controlled by Yahweh is emphasised by the fact that often he is the subject of the verbs; he sends them (וְשָׁלַחְתִּי) in 5:17; 14:19, 21; 28:23; he causes them to pass (אֶעְבִּיר, 14:15) or brings them in (אָבִיא, 5:17; 14:17); he gives the people over to them (נִתְּתִיו, 33:27), judges through them (נִשְׁפָּטִיתִי, 38:22) but also if he so wishes spares (וְהוֹתַרְתִּי, 12:16) the people from them.

The usual translation of deber is 'plague/pestilence'. However, and as we argued in the Jeremiah passages, there is nothing to suggest that a specific disease was meant by the term. 'Infectious disease' in general is possible; though a general sense of 'destruction' is more suited to the context especially when it is closely associated with blood(shed), e.g. 5:17; 28:23; or with natural forces, e.g. 38:22.

5.5 Other occurrences of deber

There are a further 16 occurrences of deber in the Hebrew Bible. These are in Exod 5:3; 9:3, 15; Lev 26:25; Deut 28:21; Num 14:12; 2 Sam 24:13, 15; 1 Kgs 8:37; 1 Chron 21:12, 14; 2 Chron 6:28; 7:13; 29:9; Ps 78: 50 and Amos 4:10. Some of these are parallel passages (2 Sam 24//1Chron 21; 1 Kgs 8// 2 Chron 6) thus these will be discussed together.

5.5.1 Exodus 5:3

v. 3
וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֱלֹהֵי הָעִבְרִים נִקְרָא עָלֵינוּ גִלְכָּה נָא דְרָדְךָ שְׁלֹשֶׁת יָמִים בַּמִּדְבָּר וְנִזְבְּחָהּ
לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ פֶּן־יַפְעֵנוּ בַּדָּבָר אוֹ בַּחֶרֶב:

Exod 5:1-6:1 is usually regarded as one literary unit.²⁶⁶ The chapter deals with the first appearance of Moses and Aaron before Pharaoh, their demand and its consequences. The events in this section are building tension and leading up to the mighty acts of Yahweh in 7:8-12:36.²⁶⁷ After²⁶⁸ Moses was well received by the elders and the people of Israel in 4:29 we now find him and Aaron appearing in front of Pharaoh. Cassuto suggests that since it is not stated explicitly that Moses and Aaron were sent by Yahweh, perhaps they acted on their own behalf and thus made the situation worse (p. 65). To the contrary, Houtman argues that ‘the lack of a specific mandate’ from Yahweh was not the point. To him the important issue of the text is the ‘execution of instructions’ given to Moses in 3:15-22 (p. 461). According to those instructions Moses was to expect that Pharaoh would not listen.

Their request was presented more as a demand than a supplication. Both Moses and Aaron appear confident and sure of themselves, almost arrogant before Pharaoh. Yahweh, the God of Israel says but really he commands (expressed by the Piel imperative of שָׁלַח) Pharaoh to allow his people to celebrate him in the desert, שָׁלַח אֶת-עַמִּי וַיְחַגּוּ לִי בַמִּדְבָּר (v. 1). Although the request is presented in terms of religion (celebrating a feast), there are deeper issues involved as becomes clearer from the next verse (and as the story unfolds in the following chapters). This is a power struggle between Yahweh and Pharaoh.²⁶⁹ Pharaoh’s reply in v. 2 matches Moses’ demand;²⁷⁰ it is arrogant and dismissive,²⁷¹ ‘who is Yahweh that I should ²⁶⁶ For example, J. I. Durham, Exodus, WBC 3 (Waco: Word Books, 1987), pp. 61-71; T. E. Fretheim, Exodus, Interpretation (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1991), pp. 82-88; C. Houtman, Exodus, transl. by J. Rebel and S. Woudstra (Kampen: KOK Publishing House, 1993), I, pp. 455-482. He notes that vv. 1-5 are a literary composite (p. 459). W. H. C. Propp, Exodus 1-18: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB 2 (New York: Doubleday, 1999), pp. 243- 261; C. Meyers, Exodus (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005), pp. 67- 71. Especially useful is his ch. 2 with suggested readings and Bibliography on Exodus (pp. 21-31). See also U. Cassuto, A Commentary on the Book of Exodus, transl. by I. Abrahams (Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 1967), pp. 65- 75; R. E. Clements, Exodus, Cambridge Bible Commentary (Cambridge: University Press, 1972), pp. 32-35.

²⁶⁷ Durham, p. 66.

²⁶⁸ Cassuto points out that the opening sentence of 5:1, וְאֶת־רַב־מִצְרָיִם מִשָּׁה וְאֶת־רַב־מִצְרָיִם is typical in Canaanite literature (p. 65).

²⁶⁹ Propp, p. 67; Houtman, p. 462.

²⁷⁰ The same verb, שָׁלַח is used as in v. 1.

²⁷¹ So Durham, p. 64 and Houtman, p. 462. Cassuto (p. 66) and Clements (Exodus, p. 34) explain Pharaoh’s reaction stemming from the Egyptian belief that he himself was divine. However, Houtman rightly pointed out that this is ‘beside the point’ (p. 462)

listen to his voice and send Israel (away)?' (מִי יִהְיֶה אֲשֶׁר אֲשַׁמַּע בְּקוֹלוֹ לְשַׁלַּח) (לֹא יָדַעְתִּי אֶת־יְהוָה) (אֶת־יִשְׂרָאֵל). Pharaoh's statement, 'I do not know Yahweh' (לֹא יָדַעְתִּי אֶת־יְהוָה), is insulting both towards Yahweh himself and the Israelites. It is not that Pharaoh would not have heard of Yahweh but more that he does not acknowledge him or his authority over the Israelites. Therefore his answer is a categoric 'No', 'and moreover,²⁷² Israel, I shall not send (her away)' (וְגַם אֶת־יִשְׂרָאֵל לֹא אֲשַׁלַּח). Pharaoh will show who has the real authority. Not only does he not permit the Israelites to go and celebrate Yahweh but he also makes their already hard conditions worse.²⁷³ This act will result in a conflict between Moses and the people (v. 20) as well as Moses and Yahweh (vv. 22-23).

V. 3 has Moses and Aaron speaking again, repeating v. 1 with several differences. First of all there is a difference in their tone, they sound more apologetic and less arrogant.²⁷⁴ The demand turns into a request. Also as Pharaoh declared that he does not know Yahweh, they now refer to him as 'the God of the Hebrews' (אֱלֹהֵי הָעִבְרִים). They still convey Yahweh's message, only they change tactics.²⁷⁵ Politely they explain that they are obliged to make the journey into the desert as their God has met with them (עָלִינוּ נִקְרָא), implying not stating, that he commanded them. These are milder terms than in v. 1, especially the following entreaty (using the cohortative verb form), 'please let us go on a journey' (נִלְכְּדָה נָא יְהִי־רַדְךָ). There is another change compared to v. 1. Whereas earlier there was no time limit in the demand, now it is only three days absence that they are asking for. In v. 1 they wanted to 'make a ²⁷² וְגַם carries a sense of emphatic explication rather than just a simple addition. See Propp, p. 253; Durham, p. 62; Cassuto, p. 66.

²⁷³ Propp points out that Pharaoh refers to Israel by their name for the last time in 5:2 until their release in 12:31. In between he only refers to them as 'the people' (5:4, 7; 8:4), 'the men' (5:9) or 'you' (8:24; 9:28; 10:10). Propp suggests that this is perhaps to show that he does not recognize their right to be a nation (p. 252).

²⁷⁴ Durham, p. 64. Cassuto argues that Moses and Aaron did not only change their tone but also whom they represent. Whereas in v. 1 they presented themselves as 'ambassadors of Yahweh', here they appear as the representatives of the people (p. 66). Houtman disagrees. He argues rightly that the context shows that although Pharaoh's reply is harsh, they are not put off by it. They change strategy; they speak politely and explain their request (p. 463). See also Durham; he sees Moses and Aaron as having lost their confidence and now 'begging' Pharaoh (p. 64). Fretheim sees them as showing little creativity in their response, merely repeating almost word by word God's command to them in 3:18, only adding a little 'twist of their own'. He writes: 'They exaggerate God's words, perhaps in the hope that the Pharaoh would be more responsive to such rhetoric (he would lose his slaves!)' (p. 86). Houtman's approach seems the right one.

²⁷⁵ See note above.

festival to Yahweh' (וַיִּחַגְּגוּ לַיהוָה בְּמִדְבָּר) , here they are to 'sacrifice to Yahweh' (וַיִּזְבְּחוּ לַיהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ) . The most important difference that appears between the two versions of request is the introduction of the element of fear. Moses and the people have to sacrifice to Yahweh because if not there are consequences, Yahweh will punish them, he shall encounter²⁷⁶ them with the deber and the 'sword'. Thus the short and abrupt demand in v. 1, 'Thus says Yahweh, God of Israel, send my people to hold a feast for me in the desert!' turns to a longer, polite request in v. 3 that also hints to the background of it, 'The God of the Hebrews called upon us, please let us go on a three day journey into the desert to sacrifice to Yahweh our God, lest he encounters us with the deber or the sword.'

Houtman raises the question whether the threat from Yahweh that the Israelites were facing made any impression on Pharaoh.²⁷⁷ Indeed, one wonders if there was not a hidden threat in Moses' words towards Pharaoh gone unnoticed at the time but coming to fulfilment in the mighty acts of Yahweh.

It is uncertain what exactly is meant by 'encounter through the deber or the sword'.²⁷⁸ As we have seen from our discussion of deber in Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and as Houtman also correctly points out, it seems that although deber is usually translated as 'pestilence',²⁷⁹ the term refers to epidemic diseases in general rather than one specific disease.²⁸⁰ In this sense there would have been a threat in the encounter with Yahweh through deber also to the Egyptians and Pharaoh himself; infectious diseases would spread from the Israelites to the Egyptians without regard ²⁷⁶ פגע can be used in the sense of violent confrontation, e.g. Judg 8:21; 15:12; 18:25. The sense here is that of a 'hostile treatment' by Yahweh. See Houtman, p. 464. He argues that translations such as 'hit with' or 'strike with' (e. g. CJB, NIV, NJB, Propp, p. 243) are too weak and do not convey the true sense. He suggests 'cut us down'. Durham translates 'send disaster upon us' (p. 61); Clements, Exodus, 'he will attack us' (p. 34); others mostly 'fall upon us' (e.g. Cassuto, p. 67; Meyers following NRSV, p. 49; also JPS; NAU and RSV).

²⁷⁷ P. 465. He notes that rabbinic literature considered the threat to 'us' as really meaning 'you'.

²⁷⁸ In Jeremiah Yahweh 'visits' (פקד) the people in order to punish them; it is likely that the 'encounter' is also of similar purpose.

²⁷⁹ So JPS; NAU; RSV. NJB and CJB have 'plague' and NIV the plural form 'plagues'. LXX and Targ have 'death', Vg has pestis. The majority of scholars also translate 'pestilence'; for example, Cassuto, p. 67; Meyers, Exodus, p. 49; Clements, Exodus, p. 32; Fretheim, p. 86 and Houtman, p. 455. Propp (p. 243) and Durham (p. 61) have 'plague'.

²⁸⁰ See above 5.3.10 and 5.4.9; also Houtman, p. 464.

J. Blair 5. Deber

to one's social status.²⁸¹ Disease was one of the greatest killers of ancient times, and war was another.²⁸² 'Sword' does not necessarily mean 'war' here, but it can be taken as referring to violent death.²⁸³ As the story unfolds it becomes clear how these threats are realized. The Egyptians are stricken by various kinds of diseases; nature, animals and humans are violated.

5.5.2 Exodus 9: 3, 15

v. 3

הִנֵּה יַד־יְהוָה הוֹיָה בְּמִקְנֶה אֲשֶׁר בַּשָּׂדֶה בַּסּוּסִים בַּחֲמֹרִים בַּגְּמְלִים בַּבְּקָר וּבַצֹּאן דִּבֶּר כְּבִד מְאֹד :

v. 15

כִּי עָתָה שְׁלַחְתִּי אֶת־יָדִי וְאָךְ אוֹתָךְ וְאֶת־עַמְּךָ בַּדֶּבֶר וַתִּכְחַד מִן־הָאָרֶץ :

With chapter 5 vv. 1-3 the scene was set for the narrative of the 'ten plagues of Egypt' (7:8 -12:36).²⁸⁴ Meyers draws attention to the inappropriateness of this expression. He shows that 'the ten plagues' is a post-biblical term and that its use is not supported by either the exodus account or by other biblical references (e.g. Deut 4:34; Pss 78:43-51; 105:26-27; Jer 32:20-21). 'Signs' and/or 'wonders' are better terms and their use is supported by their occurrence in reference to these events.²⁸⁵ Durham's 'mighty acts' is also to the point.²⁸⁶

²⁸¹ Propp, p. 253, and contra Houtman, who argues that the reference to war does not make sense here and that thus 'pestilence or the sword' should not be taken literally. Instead he sees the expression as a merism, referring to some 'fearful calamities' (pp. 465-466). However, this cannot be the case. True, deber does not refer to one specific disease, but we have seen that it is best to take it to refer to 'infectious disease' in general, and this interpretation fits in most of its occurrences so far. Sword, referring to war or violence (violent death) also occurs elsewhere, e.g. Exod 17:13; 22:24; Lev 26:6-8; Num 14:3, 43; 1 Sam 15:33; 1 Chron 21:12, etc. One cannot help but think of the curses in Lev 26:14-46 and Deut 28:15-68 that befall those who disobey Yahweh. Both deber and sword occur in the list. (Clements, Exodus, p. 35)

²⁸² See n. 82 in 5.3.1 and 5.3.10.

²⁸³ Propp notes that both LXX and the Targis interpret 'sword' as 'murder' (p. 245).

²⁸⁴ There is disagreement amongst commentators regarding the number of 'plagues' that is mostly related to source analysis. Propp mentions six, seven or eight (pp. 310-321); Meyers, Exodus, argues for nine (p. 78). Clements and Durham (see n. 266) follow the traditional ten.

²⁸⁵ Beside the above mentioned passages 'wonders' appears in Exod 3:20; 4:21; 7:8; 11:9, 10. 'Sign' is used in 4:17; 8:23; 10:1-2. 'Signs and wonders' together are used in 7:3.

²⁸⁶ P. 116 for example.

As Yahweh promised in 6:1 to Moses, ‘and you shall see what I shall do to pharaoh’ (עֲתָה תִּרְאֶה אֲשֶׁר אֶעֱשֶׂה לְפָרְעֹה), the acts of his mighty hands²⁸⁷ are slowly unfolding in Egypt. After an introductory act of magic, the turning of Aaron’s staff into a snake (7:10-13), the real strikes begin. The water of the Nile (and all water in Egypt) turned to blood (7:14-24); frogs appeared from everywhere and inundated the living spaces (8: 1-15, וַתֵּעַל הַצְּפַרְדֵּי וַתִּכַּס אֶת-אֲרֶץ מִצְרָיִם); swarms of gnats (8:16-19) and flies (8:20-32) made life difficult for both humans and animals.²⁸⁸ The afflictions were becoming more serious and whereas Pharaoh’s magicians could also produce the first and the second signs, the afflictions from the third onwards became unmanageable for them and thus they disappeared from the narrative.

Exodus 9:1-7 relates the fifth blow on the Egyptians. This time their livestock is afflicted which has obvious consequences on the people.²⁸⁹

V. 1 contains the usual formula, Yahweh sends Moses to Pharaoh to relay his command. ‘Go to pharaoh and say to him: thus says Yahweh, the God of the Hebrews, send my people to serve (i.e worship) me.’ The expression כֹּה־אָמַר יְהוָה בְּהִאָּמַר יְהוָה occurs several times throughout the narrative with slight variations.²⁹⁰ The Israelites’ request has changed a little, in 5:1 they asked to ‘hold a festival’ (חַג), in 5:3 to ‘sacrifice’ (זִבְחָה), and now it has changed to ‘serve’ (עָבַד).²⁹¹

Vv. 2-3 warn Pharaoh of the consequences of his stubbornness; v. 2 contains the first part of the warning and v. 3 the details of the punishment. If Pharaoh keeps refusing to let the people go, אִם־מָאֵן אַתָּה לְשַׁלַּח, he will experience the hand of Yahweh.

²⁸⁷ NIV and NJB are taking כַּיָּד הַזֹּקֶה to be referring to God’s hands, even though clearly it is Pharaoh’s ‘hands’ that are referred to. However, there is an allusion in it to 3:19 where the king of Egypt would be compelled by a mighty hand (Yahweh’s) to let the Israelites go.

²⁸⁸ The same word, ‘swarm’, עָרַב is used for ‘plague’ number three (8:17) and four (8:20) with the difference that the fourth one is עָרַב קָבֵד, ‘great swarm’.

²⁸⁹ Propp comments that the placing of the fifth plague here gives a ‘sense of mounting severity’ (p. 320). Indeed, as the narrative progresses the acts of Yahweh affect the Egyptians harder and harder. The annoyances become more serious and finally life-threatening.

²⁹⁰ 7:16 is the same but adds ‘to worship me in the desert’; 7:26; 8:16 do not have ‘God of the Hebrews’; 9:13 and 10:3 contain the same expression.

²⁹¹ In the other occurrences of the expression (e.g. 7:16; 26; 8:16; 9:13 and 10:3) it is also עָבַד.

To make the warning more explicit the general reference to ‘your cattle that are in the field’ is then spelled out in detail: horses, asses, camels, ox and sheep will be affected by a ‘very great deber’. Thus it is clear from this verse that the ‘hand of Yahweh’ points to the יָדְיָהוָה כְּבֵדָה מְאֹד. The adjective כְּבֵדָה and the particle מְאֹד emphasise the extent and gravity of the affliction. The usual translation of deber in this verse is similar to other occurrences of the term, ‘plague’²⁹² or ‘pestilence’,²⁹³ but some also suggest ‘murrain’²⁹⁴ or some kind of ‘disease’.²⁹⁵ It is clear from the context that some kind of infectious disease is meant by the word that was expected to strike a great blow on the Egyptians. However, as Clements rightly observed, it is impossible to determine the exact nature of the disease (p. 53). This is not the point or else the fact that it only affected the animals of the Egyptians would not make sense (vv. 6-7).

Deber occurs without any articles or prepositions, and stands in parallel with ‘the hand of Yahweh’, thus it is possible to regard it personified. In fact the passage makes more sense if we do. That we are told in vv. 6-7 that not one single animal of the Israelites died but that all the livestock of the Egyptians did makes it clear that deber was controlled by Yahweh. A disease might not be able to distinguish between Egyptian and Israelite animals, but the agent of Yahweh who carries out his exact orders would.

The next occurrence of deber is in v. 13, after the sixth mighty act of Yahweh has failed to change Pharaoh’s resolve. This time there is a longer and more intense warning that has been variously explained by scholars.²⁹⁶ The announcement of Yahweh sending the full force of his ‘plagues’ onto the Egyptians (v. 14) is pointing to the gradual intensification in severity of the acts of Yahweh that will ultimately culminate in the death of the firstborn.²⁹⁷ Vv. 14 and 15 are closely linked, they ²⁹² NIV; NJB; RSV; Propp, p. 289.

²⁹³ NAU; Vg; Cassuto, p. 111; Clements, Exodus, p. 53; Meyers, Exodus, p. 78.

²⁹⁴ JPS.

²⁹⁵ Durham translates ‘epidemic’ (p. 116).

²⁹⁶ For example according to Childs it is ‘an explanation of the number of the mighty acts’; or ‘an apology for all of the plagues’ for Hyatt (cf. Durham, p. 127).

²⁹⁷ Cassuto, pp. 115-116; Fretheim, p. 124; Meyers, Exodus, p. 85.

contain parallel elements as well as v. 15 being explanatory of v. 14.²⁹⁸ Both verses begin with כִּי + temporal reference followed by Yahweh's statement of performing his mighty act. In both verses this is expressed by the verb שָׁלַח²⁹⁹ + אֶת־ and the object. In v. 14 Yahweh states 'For at this time I am sending all my blows'³⁰⁰ (כִּי בַפְעֻם הַזֶּה אֲנִי שֹׁלֵחַ אֶת־כָּל־מִגִּפְתֵּי (כִּי עַתָּה שֹׁלְחָתִי אֶת־יָדְךָ)). In v. 14 the blows are against 'your heart and your servants and your people', in v. 15 Yahweh smites 'you and your people'. The parallelism between the two verses is clear. Thus אֶת־כָּל־מִגִּפְתֵּי and אֶת־יָדְךָ are pointing to the same thing, deber. Yahweh shall smite Pharaoh and his people through deber, and they shall be cut off from all the earth, i.e. the destruction will be complete. Thus yet again we have deber referred to as 'the Hand of Yahweh', an agent of Yahweh carrying out his punishment and bringing about complete destruction. It is also referred to as one of the מִגִּפְתֵּי through whom Yahweh intends to teach Pharaoh a lesson, 'so that you shall know that there is no one like me in all the earth' (v. 14). The personification is clear in this passage and the obvious link with 5:3 implies that deber is best understood there as here, a personification of disease. 'My hand' is a designation of deber, as one of Yahweh's most important agents of punishment.

5.5.3 Leviticus 26:25

v. 25

וְהִבֵּאתִי עֲלֵיכֶם חֶרֶב נֶקֶמַת נֶקֶם־בְּרִית וְנֶאֱסַפְתֶּם אֶל־עַרְיֹכֶם וְשִׁלַּחְתִּי דָבָר
בְּתוֹכְכֶם וְנִתְּתֶם בְּיַד־אֹיִב:

²⁹⁸ Most translations (NIV; RSV; CJB, NAU; NJB) as well as scholars (Cassuto, p. 116; Clements, Exodus, p. 55; Fretheim, p. 124; Propp, p. 333; Meyers, Exodus, p. 74), take v. 15 in a conditional sense. However, Durham is correct in pointing out that there is nothing in the text to support conditionality. He writes: 'None of the usual terms or circumlocutions of conditional expression are present (cf. GKC...), nor is there anything in the wider context of the account to suggest a conditional sense.' Yahweh states what he is doing and what he intends to do. (p. 127).

²⁹⁹ In v. 14 the Participle form (שֹׁלֵחַ) is used and in v. 15 the Perfect (שֹׁלְחָתִי).

³⁰⁰ The plural only occurs here and the word מִגִּפְתָּהּ is usually translated as 'plague'. However, it also has the sense of affliction from Yahweh; people smitten by Yahweh cf. 1 Sam 4:17; 6:4; 2 Sam 17:9; Ps 106:29. So also Durham, p. 123.

Chapter 26 is the penultimate chapter of the Book of Leviticus. It contains the blessings and curses that Yahweh deals out to those who obey or disobey him. Obedience means following Yahweh's commands and laws (v. 3), disobedience is going against these. V. 1 pinpoints what lies at the heart of the question of obedience/disobedience, namely idol worship. It warns against it. The importance and graveness of this issue is expressed in negative statements which contain a threefold prohibition: 1) 'you shall not make (לא־תַעֲשׂוּ) for yourselves idols', אֱלִילִים, lit. 'worthless things' and 'an image', וּפְסֵל; 2) 'you shall not set up a pillar', וְאָבֵן מִשְׁכִּית לֹא, וְיִמְצַבֶּה לֹא־תִקְיִמוּ; 3) 'you shall not place a carved stone, לֹא, תַתְּנֶנּוּ, in your land to bow down before it', לְהִשְׁתַּחֲוֹת עָלֶיהָ. These statements recall the prohibition of making of idols (the same words are used) in Exod 20:4, לֹא תַעֲשׂוּ־לָךְ פְּסֵל. Clearly the intent of the verse is to reinforce the forbidding of the worship of foreign deities and the use of pagan cult objects.³⁰¹

Then two commands follow in v. 2 as positive statements, 'my Sabbaths you shall keep', אֶת־שַׁבְּתֹתַי תִּשְׁמְרוּ, and 'my sanctuary you shall fear', וּמִקְדָּשִׁי תִירָאוּ. This too, is a reminder of the Decalogue in Exod 20:8. These are the keystones of the Covenant (Exod 19-24).³⁰²

Vv. 3- 13 contain the blessings for those who are loyal to Yahweh and obey his commands and follow the laws. There is a promise of peace and prosperity, and also of military success.³⁰³

The curses match the blessings, the result of disobedience is the reversal of the blessings. There are five sets of blessings and in response five sets of curses (vv. 16-17, 18-20, 21-22, 23-26, and 27-39) for covenant breakers.³⁰⁴ This section is larger than the previous one containing the blessings and this suggests that the emphasis is on the consequences of disobedience. Yahweh blesses his people but even more importantly, he punishes them for disloyalty. The severity of the punishments

³⁰¹ Levine, Leviticus, p. 181; Porter, Leviticus, p. 207; Gerstenberger, pp. 403-404.

³⁰² Hartley, Leviticus, p. 449; J. Milgrom, Leviticus: A Book of Ritual and Ethics: A Continental Commentary (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2004), p. 317; Bellinger, p. 156.

³⁰³ On the blessings see commentaries, Porter, Leviticus, pp. 207-211; Levine, Leviticus, pp.182-185; Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 451-464; Gerstenberger, pp. 406-409; Bellinger, pp. 156-157; Milgrom, Leviticus, pp. 317-319.

³⁰⁴ Gerstenberger, p. 410; Bellinger, p. 157; Milgrom, Leviticus, p. 319.

increases with each set.³⁰⁵ The first set of punishments (vv. 16-17) is terror and disease.³⁰⁶ The second set (vv. 18-20) shows an increase in intensity, Yahweh will discipline (כָּסַף) the people for their sin (חַטָּאת) seven times. This turns out to be pride (נִפְאוֹן עֲזוֹכָם, lit. ‘powerful pride’) in their land. Their pride leads the Israelites away from Yahweh for they rely on the land for wealth and well-being instead of trusting Yahweh.³⁰⁷ The punishment matches the sin, the land will not be able to sustain them, Yahweh shall turn the heavens like iron and the earth like bronze.³⁰⁸ The metaphor refers to a drought and the famine following it.³⁰⁹

The third set of curses (vv. 21-22) counters the second half of v. 6 (I will eliminate savage beasts) and v. 9 (I shall make you fruitful) respectively with the punishment of sending wild animals who will make the people childless, וְהִשְׁלַחְתִּי בְכֶם אֶת־חַיֵּי הַשָּׂדֶה וְשָׂכְלָה אֶתְכֶם. Again there is an increase in intensity: v. 21 states that the punishments will be multiplied seven times over.³¹⁰

The fourth set of curses is included in vv. 23-26. If Israel continues to be hostile to Yahweh and will not learn from his discipline (לֹא תִסְרְוּ לִי וְהִלַּכְתֶּם עִמִּי קָרִי) then Yahweh himself will be hostile to them (walk contrary to them, וְהִלַּכְתִּי אַחֲרֵי־אֲנִי). The consequences will be an increased (seven times) punishment, this time consisting of the sword, deber, and, although the word ‘famine’ is not present, the description in v. 26 clearly refers to that (‘when I break off your supply of bread...’, בְּשִׁבְרִי לְכֶם מִטֶּה־לֶחֶם).³¹¹

V. 25 states explicitly that this punishment comes from the breaking of the covenant (referred to in vv. 1-2). Yahweh says: ‘And I will bring on you the sword to avenge

³⁰⁵ Porter, Leviticus, p. 213; Bellinger, p. 157; Milgrom, Leviticus, p. 319;

³⁰⁶ For detailed analyses see Hartley, Leviticus, pp. 464-465; Gerstenberger, pp. 412-414; also Milgrom, Leviticus, p. 319; Levine, Leviticus, p. 185; Bellinger, p. 157.

³⁰⁷ Hartley, Leviticus, p. 465; Gerstenberger, p. 415. The theme of the people’s pride is also found in Ezek 7:24; 24:21; 30:6, 18; 33:28.

³⁰⁸ In Deut 28:23 the expression is used in reverse order, heavens will be like bronze and the earth like iron. See also Esarhaddon Treaty, ANET, pp.534-541.

³⁰⁹ Hartley, Leviticus, p. 465; Gerstenberger, pp. 415-416; Milgrom, Leviticus, p. 320; Levine, Leviticus, p. 186.

³¹⁰ Hartley, Leviticus, p. 465; Levine, Leviticus, p. 186; Gerstenberger, pp. 416-417; Milgrom, Leviticus, p. 320.

³¹¹ Bellinger, p. 158; Milgrom, Leviticus, p. 320; Gerstenberger, p. 418; Porter, Leviticus, p. 214.

the breaking of the covenant. When you withdraw into your cities, I will send deber among you, and you will be given into enemy hands.’

Deber, along with sword and implicitly famine, is clearly sent by Yahweh as punishment for the breaking of the covenant. Deber appears as a noun in the absolute state without the definite article or any prepositions, it is ‘sent’, שְׁלַח, by Yahweh. It is part of the covenant curses, and there is no indication in this passage of them being personified. However, if we take this passage together with its parallel in Deut 28 a different possibility emerges. We shall return to this in our examination of Deut 28.

The last set of curses, intensified yet again seven times, is the most horrid of all. Yahweh shall devastate the land so that the people will resort to cannibalism. Parents will eat the flesh of their own sons and daughters.³¹² Finally, Yahweh shall turn his fury against the cause of all problems, the false places of worship (vv. 30-32). These verses illustrate vividly the contempt Yahweh feels towards the idols and the people who used them as well as the destruction resulting from his anger. Yahweh shall destroy (two Hiphil verbs are used, ‘I shall destroy’, וְהַשְׁמַדְתִּי, and ‘I shall cut down’, וְהִכְרַתִּי) everything, the high places, בְּמִזְבְּחֵיכֶם, the incense-altars, חַמְזֵיכֶם, and the people. Their dead bodies will be heaped on top of the lifeless bodies of their idols. The use of the same word ‘corpse’, for both the people’s and the idols’ remains (פְּגָרֵיכֶם and גְּלוּלֵיכֶם) is ironic and is meant to be insulting.³¹³ The words used to describe the devastation of the land, ‘ruin’, חָרָבָה, ‘desolate’, שָׁמָם, are also used by the prophets in descriptions of the destruction left by war.³¹⁴ The curses are leading up to the last punishment, exile. This is the culmination of all.

5.5.4 Deuteronomy 28:21

v. 21

יִדְבֶק יְהוָה בְּךָ אֶת־הַדָּבָר עַד כִּלְתּוֹ אֶתְךָ מֵעַל הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־אַתָּה בָּא־שָׁמָּה לְרִשְׁתָּהּ:

³¹² This curse is also found in Deut 28:53-57; Isa 49:26; Jer 19:9; Ezek 5:10, and Zech 11:9.

³¹³ Hartley, Leviticus, p. 467.

³¹⁴ E.g. Isa 5:17; 44:26; 49:19; Jer 7:34; 25:18; Ezek 5:14, etc.

J. Blair 5. Deber

This text, similarly to Leviticus 26, contains blessings and curses as the consequences of obedience or disobedience regarding the Covenant with Yahweh.³¹⁵

There are two main parts. The first, shorter passage describes the blessings that will be awarded for obedience to Yahweh's laws (vv. 1-14). The second part is a much longer text that describes in detail the consequences for disobedience (vv. 15-68).³¹⁶

Christensen has arranged the list of curses in ten prosodic units made up of two five-part structural units, which apparently reflect the ten mighty acts of Yahweh in Exodus 7-11. According to this arrangement the emphases would be on vv. 23-26 (the centre of the first unit), destruction by famine and war, and in vv. 36-37, exile from the land.³¹⁷ McConville does not see any logical development in the list of curses, they seem to affect individuals or the people variously.³¹⁸ Christensen's arrangement seems a little forced; there is no reason why famine and war would be emphasised as opposed to the other curses. If anything, affliction by disease in various forms occurs the most often (vv. 22, 27, 28, 35). Tigay has observed a chiasmic structure of vv. 20-44 which is only a little different from that of Christensen's but it highlights the emphasis of the chapter better. According to this vv. 30-32 are in the centre, which is the undoing of the blessings.³¹⁹ It has been noted that the language of the chapter is conditional (vv. 1, 15),³²⁰ the blessings or the ³¹⁵ For detailed discussion of this chapter see commentaries, e.g. P. C. Craigie, The Book of Deuteronomy, The New International Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976), pp. 334-353; A. D. H. Mayes, Deuteronomy, New Century Bible Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1979), pp. 348-359; J. G. McConville, Deuteronomy, Apollos OT Commentary 5 (Leicester: Apollos, InterVarsity Press, 1988), pp. 397-410; P. D. Miller, Deuteronomy, Interpretation (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1990), pp. 193-198; J. H. Tigay, Deuteronomy, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1996), pp. 257-275; C. Wright, Deuteronomy, New International Biblical Commentary (Peabody: Hendrickson Publ., 1998), pp. 280-283; D. L. Christensen, Deuteronomy 21:10-34:12, WBC 6B (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 2002), pp. 664- 703.

³¹⁶ Commentators (e.g. McConville, p. 402; Mayes, p. 351; Craigie, pp. 339-340; Christensen, p. 666; see note above) point out that the fact that curses form a much larger portion than the blessings was characteristic of second-millennium Hittite treaties (e.g. treaty between Suppiluliumas and Kurtiwaza, ANET, pp. 205-206). First millennium Assyrian treaties only contained curses, e.g. Esarhaddon's vassal treaties (ANET, pp. 534-541).

³¹⁷ Christensen, p. 681. C. Wright also sees the reference to the Exodus events. He argues that negative echoes of the Abrahamic blessing as well as the Exodus deliverance can be found in the curses. The Israelites will suffer the effects of Yahweh's acts and will be led (back) into captivity (p. 282).

³¹⁸ McConville, p. 403. To the contrary Miller sees the curses as 'clearly corporate and aimed at the people as a whole' (p. 197).

³¹⁹ Tigay, p. 491.

³²⁰ Miller, p. 197; C. Wright, p. 282.

curse is conditional to obedience or disobedience to Yahweh. Loyalty results in countless blessings but disloyalty will undo it all. Therefore it is natural to regard the curses as the undoing of the blessings.

Similarly to Lev 26, the curses include disease, famine, war, and captivity. The introduction to the curses, v. 15 emphasises that all the calamities that are to be enlisted will fall upon on the people if they fail to follow Yahweh's commands and laws. Vv. 16-19 are the reverse of vv. 3-6, giving even more weight to the warning in v. 15. V. 20 states that Yahweh shall send curse, confusion and rebuke on everything that the people's hands touch. The alliteration present in the Hebrew for 'curse', הַמְּאָרָה, 'confusion', הַמְּהוּמָה, and 'rebuke', הַמְּנַעֲרָה, is reproduced in English by Tigay's 'curse, confusion and cumbrance' (p. 261). There is also a play on the word שָׁלַח, Yahweh sends (יִשְׁלַח) the curses to destroy the people's undertakings (מִשְׁלַח).

Deber occurs in v. 21 among the curses Yahweh will strike the people with if they are disobedient. It is usually taken as one of the diseases that are enlisted in the following verse (v. 22) and translated as pestilence or plague.³²¹ However, it is more likely that deber refers to disease in general as NIV renders it quite liberally, 'The Lord will plague you with diseases...'. Christensen also follows this line of interpretation and sees deber as the disease which is responsible for the ones in v. 22. He writes (p. 684): 'The "pestilence" is a severe epidemic of some sort that produces the seven afflictions of the next verse (v. 22).' This interpretation would be consistent with the meaning of deber in its other occurrences, and thus the immediate listing of several diseases in v. 22 could be seen as an explanation/expansion of the announcement of deber in v. 21.

Looking at the language of the chapter carefully, another possibility presents itself. In v. 2 and v. 15 it is said that the blessings and curses respectively 'will come upon you' (בָּאוּ עָלֶיךָ), and 'overtake you' (וְהִשִּׁיגוּךָ). In v. 21 Yahweh shall make the deber cleave/cling, יִדְבֶקֶן יְהוָה בְּךָ, to the people. Deber has the object-marker and the definite article (not a proper noun) but the verb דָּבַק 'cleave, cling, follow closely, join to', is also used figuratively of loyalty, affection³²², for persons being joined together in marriage (Gen 2: 24).³²³ The curses in v. 22 ‘pursue’ (רָדְפוּ) the people, in v. 45 also they ‘come upon’ (וּבָאוּ עָלֵיךָ), ‘pursue and overtake’

³²¹ NAU, JPS, RSV, Craigie, Deuteronomy, p. 341, Tigay, p. 262, translate 'pestilence'; NJB, CJB, McConville, p. 398, 'plague'.

³²² BDB, 179: 1692/2; HALOT, p. 209.

(וּרְדְפוּ וְהִשִּׁיגוּ) them. These verbs suggest that the blessings and the curses are personified forces. The verbs used with Yahweh as subject support this suggestion. Repeatedly he ‘commands’ them, יִצַּו יְהוָה (v. 8) ‘sends’ them, יִשְׁלַח יְהוָה (v. 20), in the sense of letting them loose.³²⁴ Tigay argues against personifying the blessings and curses in Deuteronomy on the grounds that the book deliberately avoids any suggestion of the existence of supernatural forces independent from Yahweh. He writes:

However, actual personification is absent in Deuteronomy, which avoids any suggestion of independent supernatural powers in addition to God, such as the Greek spirits of punishment, the Erinyes. Instead, the blessings and curses are merely reified and treated as impersonal forces under God’s absolute control, and the verbs express the idea that at God’s command the blessings will come to Israel with no struggle on its part and the curses will ensue despite any effort on its part. (p. 258)

However, Tigay’s opposition is unfounded. Personifying these forces does not suggest in any way that the author is implying the existence of supernatural beings independent from Yahweh. To the contrary, in each case it is very clear that these forces, personified or not, come from Yahweh. He is in control.³²⁵ Blessing or punishment come from Yahweh, sometimes carried out by his agents. The personification of abstract concepts, natural forces, only aids the audience’s understanding of the message the author/poet/ prophet is trying to convey.

5.5.5 Numbers 14:12

v. 12

אֶפְנוּ בְדָבָר וְאוֹרְשָׁנוּ וְאָעֲשֶׂה אֶתְךָ לְגוֹי־גְדוֹל וְעַצוֹם מִמֶּנּוּ:

This chapter follows on the events of the previous. After the spies sent out into Canaan return and report that the promised land, although ‘flowing with milk and honey’, is populated by powerful people who live in fortified strongholds, the ³²³ LXX translates it with προσκολλησαι, προσκολλαομαι meaning ‘be united (in marriage)’.

³²⁴ Cf. Deut 32:24.

³²⁵ Miller, p. 196.

Israelites panic (v. 1, the people cry out, אֶת־קוֹלָם ... וַתִּשָּׂא , and weep, וַיִּבְכּוּ) and rebel against Moses and Aaron (v. 2, וַיִּלְלוּ).³²⁶ They complain, contemplating even to change their leaders (vv. 3-4). Yahweh then appears (v. 10); he is angry and wants to punish the people (vv. 11-12). This story has many parallels. In fact as G. Wenham shows, Numbers 11-21 is dominated by a series of complaint stories that follow the same pattern.³²⁷ The people's protests in every case prompt punishment (fire in ch. 11; skin disease in ch. 12; plague in 17, snake bites in ch. 21) that only ceases when the people appeal to Moses and he intercedes with Yahweh. However, when the people's complaints are so serious as to be taken as rebellion against Yahweh, the punishment reflects this in its severity.³²⁸ This is the case in the present narrative. The problem with the people's murmuring was not so much that they feared their present situation (i.e. the military might of the Canaanites) but that in so doing they did not trust Yahweh's promise. Their desire to have died in Egypt or in the wilderness (v. 3) shows not only a lack of appreciation of God's saving acts in the Exodus but rejection of his promise to give them the land of Canaan.³²⁹ Further, in wanting to choose another leader for themselves (v. 4), they rejected Yahweh's chosen one, another sign of their rebellion.³³⁰

In response, Yahweh's judgement matches the people's act of rebellion. He appears ('the glory of Yahweh', כְּבוֹד יְהוָה) to all the Israelites, but he only addresses Moses, showing his rejection of the people who have rejected him (v. 4).³³¹ The second part ³²⁶ וַיִּבְכּוּ here is used in the sense of expressing the Israelites' frustration, but elsewhere it can express other kinds of weeping (e.g. joy in Gen 43:30; grief in 1 Sam 1:10; repentance in 2 Kgs 22:19, etc.). See P. Budd, Numbers, WBC 5 (Waco: Word Books, 1984), p.155. J. Milgrom, Numbers, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1990) points out that the use of three verbs instead of the usual one (וַתִּן) in expressing the people's crying out is intentional, in order to 'heighten the effect' (p. 107). Similarly, there are three words for 'people' in vv. 1-2, כָּל־הָעָדָה, כָּל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, and הָעָם. This is to emphasise the fact that the whole people were involved in the rebellion. See T. R. Ashley, The Book of Numbers (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993), p. 245.

³²⁷ Numbers, OT Guides (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997), pp. 51-52. A similar pattern emerges in chs 11, 12, 17 (English 16) and 21.

³²⁸ Wenham, Numbers, p. 51; B. Maarsingh, Numbers: A Practical Commentary, Text and Interpretation (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987), pp.47-48.

³²⁹ Bellinger, p. 230; Ashley, p. 246.

³³⁰ Milgrom, Numbers, p. 108; Ashley, p. 246. The theme of 'returning to Egypt' is a symbol of Israel's rejection of Yahweh (Budd, p. 155); in Ashley's words it is: 'a synonym for rebellion against God' (p. 247). For example: Deut 17:16; Hos 7:11; Isa 30:1-7; 31:1-3; Jer 2:18, 36; Ezek 17:15.

³³¹ According to Ashley the point of Yahweh's question is that he is no longer going to tolerate the people's rebellion (p. 254).

of his question in v. 10 refers back to his mighty acts in Egypt. The Israelites seem to have forgotten about all that Yahweh did in order to save them, so now he turns his agents of punishment on the people. Yahweh smote Pharaoh and his people (and livestock) with deber in Exod 9: 13 and 15, and now he intends to smite the Israelites with the same punishment, אֶכְנֹוּ בַדֶּבֶר.³³² The connection with the Exod 9 passages is clear, thus the definite article with deber ('with/through the deber') points to the specific occurrences there. A specific meaning for deber is not important here. The point is that the same agent of punishment that was sent by Yahweh to aid the Israelites' escape from Egypt is now turned on them by Yahweh, because they would rather go back to Egypt, from where Yahweh had rescued them.³³³

Moses' interceding saves the people, although they do not escape punishment. Even if they do not die a sudden death, Yahweh disinherits³³⁴ them, they themselves (including Moses) will not enter the promised land (vv. 29-30).

5.5.6 2 Samuel 24:13-15 // 1 Chronicles 21:12-14

2 Sam 24:13

וַיִּבְאֵר־נֹד אֶל־דָּוִד וַיִּגְדֹּל־לוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר לּוֹ הֲתִבּוֹא לְךָ שִׁבְעַת שָׁנִים רָעַב בְּאֶרֶץ־ךָ
 אִם־שְׁלֹשָׁה חֳדָשִׁים נֹסֶף לִפְנֵי־צָרֶיךָ וְהוּא רֹדְפֶךָ וְאִם־הָיִיתָ שְׁלֹשָׁת יָמִים דָּבַר בְּאֶרֶץ־ךָ עֲתָה דַע וּרְאֵה מָה־אָשִׁיב שְׁלַחִי דָבָר:

v. 15

וַיִּתֵּן יְהוָה דָּבָר בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל מִהַבְּקָר וְעַד־עֵת מוֹעֵד וַיָּמָת מִן־הָעָם מִדָּן וְעַד־בְּאֵר
 שָׁבַע שִׁבְעִים אֶלֶף אִישׁ:

1 Chron 21:12

אִם־שְׁלוֹשׁ שָׁנִים רָעַב וְאִם־שְׁלֹשָׁה חֳדָשִׁים נֹסֶפָה מִפְּנֵי־צָרֶיךָ וְחָרַב אוֹיְבֶיךָ
 לְמִשְׁגַּת וְאִם־שְׁלֹשָׁת יָמִים חָרַב יְהוָה וְדָבַר בְּאֶרֶץ וּמְלֹאךָ יְהוָה מִשְׁחִית בְּכָל־גְּבוּל יִשְׂרָאֵל וְעַתָּה רְאֵה מָה־אָשִׁיב אֶת־שְׁלַחִי דָבָר:

v. 14

וַיִּתֵּן יְהוָה דָּבָר בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל וַיִּפֹּל מִיִּשְׂרָאֵל שִׁבְעִים אֶלֶף אִישׁ:

³³² Ashley, p. 255; Bellinger, p. 230.

³³³ LXX and Targ translate deber by 'death', the modern Bible versions and commentaries give the usual 'plague' (NIV; Maarsingh, p. 48; Bellinger, p. 230) or 'pestilence' (JPS; NAU; NJB; RSV; Budd, p. 148; Ashley, p. 251).

³³⁴ Ashley argues that the word וַאֲוִר־שָׁנִי may be taken in the sense of destruction (p. 255). However, it is not necessary to argue for complete destruction here, which is usually connected with deber, as deber does not actually afflict the people thanks to Moses' intercession.

There are two occurrences of deber in 2 Samuel 24, vv. 13 and 15, and two in its parallel, 1 Chron 21, vv. 12 and 14. This is the story of David's census of Israel.³³⁵ It is an intriguing story because the census was wrong in Yahweh's eyes (and David/the people had to be punished for carrying it out), yet it was Yahweh who told/incited (יִצְטָרֵם) David to carry out the census in the first place. The reason given is that Yahweh's anger was aroused against Israel, though we are not told what caused his anger.³³⁶ In 1 Chron 21:1 it was Satan who inspired David to take the census.³³⁷ In any case David was an instrument of Yahweh's punishment; because of what he did the people were punished. Ultimately it was not David's fault, he was incited to carry out a census.³³⁸ Vv. 1-9 (// 1 Chron 21: 1-7) describe the census.³³⁹ In v. 10 David suddenly realises that he has committed a great sin against Yahweh (חָטְאָתִי מְאֹד),³⁴⁰ and asks for forgiveness.³⁴¹ In v. 12 David is presented with three ³³⁵ Chapter 24 is linked with chapter 21 which is another story of divine anger, its consequences (three years of famine) and appeasement. See S. R. Driver, Notes on the Hebrew Text and the Topography of the Books of Samuel (Oxford: Calrendon Press, 2nd rev. & enlarged edn, 1913), pp. 372-380, esp. p. 372; P. K. McCarter, Jr., 2 Samuel, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1984), pp. 502-518, esp. p. 509; A. A. Anderson, 2 Samuel, WBC 11 (Dallas: Word Books), pp. 279-287, esp. p. 281; H. W. Hertzberg, 1 and 2 Samuel: A Commentary, OT Library, transl. by J. S. Bowden (London: SCM Press, 1964), pp. 408-416, esp. p. 410; W. Brueggemann, First and Second Samuel, Interpretation (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1990), pp. 350-357, esp. p. 350.

³³⁶ Hertzberg p. 411 and McCarter, 2 Samuel, p. 508 suggest that it was 'anger for an unknown reason' (both quoting Caspari); Anderson, 2 Samuel, thinks that some unspecified sin of Israel (cf. 1 Sam 2:25; 2 Sam 16:10-12) was the cause of Yahweh's wrath (p. 284); and Brueggemann, Samuel, asserts that whatever the reason, it is this 'unexplained, inexplicable anger of Yahweh that initiates the story' (p. 351).

³³⁷ Hertzberg argues that this was a 'theological vindication of God' which by no means meant a 'theological simplification' (p. 411). On this issue see also commentaries on 1 Chronicles, e.g. J. M. Myers, 1 Chronicles, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965), pp. 143-150, esp. p. 147; R. Braun, 1 Chronicles, WBC 14 (Waco: Word Books, 1986), pp. 212-227; S. Japhet, pp. 374-375. She argues contrary to the usual scholarly opinion (according to which 1 Chronicles 21 represents the latest stage of development in the figure of Satan as the embodiment of evil), that both theological and linguistic considerations point to the word satan serving as a common noun in 1 Chron 21:1 similarly to its other occurrences in 1 Kgs 11:14, 23, 25, or Ps 109:6. It 'refers to "an adversary", who acts against Israel by inciting the king to take the wrong action.' From a literary point of view he is the antithesis of Joab (p. 375). G. N. Knoppers, 1 Chronicles 10-29, SB (New York: Doubleday, 2004), pp. 742-764, argues similarly and translates the word as 'an adversary' (p. 742). For satan in the Hebrew Bible see P. Day.

³³⁸ Contra J. Mauchline, ed., 1 and 2 Samuel, New Century Bible (London: Oliphants, 1971), pp. 322-327, who thinks that (apart from v. 1) vv. 2-9 clearly present the census as having been David's idea (p. 322).

³³⁹ Brueggemann, Samuel, sees the narrative as a 'lawsuit'; thus vv. 2-9 state the sin and then vv. 10-17 the punishment (p. 351).

³⁴⁰ McCarter, 2 Samuel, points out that this sudden change is not explained here. However, the parallel account in 1 Chron 21: 6-7 explains it in a way (p. 510). In Chronicles Joab is presented as 'undermining' David's order by not counting Benjamin and Levi because he did not agree with the alternative punishments, he is to choose one of them. All three are included in the curses in Deut 28:15-25 and Lev 26:14-46. In this case it was seven years of famine, רָעָב, or three months of killings by pursuing army, נִסְדָּה לְפָנֵי-צָרֵיָהּ (sword), or three days of deber/disease, דֵּבֶר (v.13). The shortening of the duration of the punishment suggests their intensification,³⁴² thus deber would appear as the most terrible of all.³⁴³ Hertzberg argues that David does not actually choose the form of punishment, he ‘merely decides against the second punishment and leaves it to the Lord to decide between the first or the third.’³⁴⁴ However, we can argue that at least for the reader it is clear what choice he made. David expresses his wish not to fall into the hands of men, וּבְיַד-אָדָם אֶל-אֶפְלָה, thus rejecting the second form of punishment. But at the same time he wants to be punished by the hand of Yahweh, וּנְפִלָה-נָא בְיַד-יְהוָה. In Exod 9:15 ‘the hand of Yahweh’ was used to point to the sending of deber, thus v. 14 here clearly anticipates its coming in the next verse. Whether David consciously chose this form of punishment or not, for the reader it does not come as a surprise. The parallel account in 1 Chronicles 21: 12 supports our argument. There the choices offered to David are: three years of famine, three months suffering the destruction of the sword of the enemy, or three days of the ‘sword of Yahweh’, i.e. deber. It seems that here deber is identified as the ‘sword of Yahweh’, and this becomes in v. 16 the angel of Yahweh with the drawn sword. The sword of the enemy and the sword of Yahweh stand in antithesis.³⁴⁵ David wants to avoid the sword of the enemy and chooses instead that of Yahweh.

We are told in v. 15 that Yahweh unleashed deber on Israel, וַיִּתֵּן יְהוָה דֵּבֶר בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל, and that it killed seventy thousand of the people. What is interesting is that in the following verse (v. 16) we read that the angel stretches his hand towards Jerusalem to destroy it, וַיִּשְׁלַח יָדוֹ הַמַּלְאָךְ יְרוּשָׁלַם לְשַׁחֲתָהּ, and in v. 17 David order in the first place. Also, it is only after Yahweh declares the census evil, that David realises his sin (Knoppers, p. 753).

³⁴¹ McCarter, 2 Samuel, points out that the meaning of the verb הֵעֲבִיר-נָא is ‘transfer’, not simply ‘take away’. Thus David is asking for his sins to be transferred to someone or something else (p. 511). Anderson, 2 Samuel, agrees (p. 285).

³⁴² Hertzberg, p. 413.

³⁴³ So Japhet, p. 382.

³⁴⁴ P. 413. Also Anderson, 2 Samuel, p. 285.

³⁴⁵ Japhet, p. 381.

saw the angel who was smiting the people, בְּרֵאתוֹ אֶת־הַמַּלְאָךְ הַמִּכֶּה בָּעַם.

Therefore we suggest that here deber is personified as an angel of Yahweh. Angels as instruments of Yahweh's punishment are found elsewhere in the HB.³⁴⁶ Deber in this passage is clearly envisaged as an angel inflicting some kind of punishment; plague is possible but not certain.³⁴⁷ The word הַמִּנְפֶּה is used in vv. 21 and 25 referring to what the people were suffering from, and it can mean 'plague' as well as 'strike', 'blow' in general.³⁴⁸ Deber as the angel of Yahweh is depicted even more dramatically in 1 Chronicles 21:12-16. In v. 12 it is identified as the 'sword of Yahweh' and as 'the angel of Yahweh' destroying all parts of Israel, חָרַב יְהוָה וְדָבַר בְּאַרְצָא וּמַלְאָךְ יְהוָה . מִשְׁחִית בְּכָל־נְבוּל יִשְׂרָאֵל (וַיִּתֵּן) deber on Israel in v. 14, and in v. 15 he 'sends' an angel to destroy Jerusalem (וַיִּשְׁלַח (הַאֱלֹהִים מִלְאָךְ לִירוּשָׁלַם לְהַשְׁחִיתָהּ מַלְאָךְ הַמִּשְׁחִית (v. 15). In v. 16 David saw this angel of Yahweh standing between heaven and earth with drawn sword in his hand, extending it over Jerusalem.

It is clear that Yahweh sent and controlled the angel. In 2 Sam 24: 16 and 1 Chron 21: 15 Yahweh himself orders the angel to withdraw his hands (הִתְרַךְ יָדָיו), even before David prays for the people to be spared; and in 1 Chron 21:27 Yahweh speaks to the angel, and he puts his sword away.³⁴⁹ Yahweh sends the punishment and it is he who stops it when he determines (cf. 2 Sam 24:15a).³⁵⁰

³⁴⁶ Angels as instruments of Yahweh's punishment also occur in Exod 33:2; 2 Kgs 19:35; Pss 35:5-6; 78:49.

³⁴⁷ Mauchline, p. 325; McCarter, 2 Samuel, p. 511. He points out that some interpreters see a non-Israelite god in the figure of the angel, e.g. Reshef. There is no basis for such a suggestion.

³⁴⁸ See n. 303 in 5.5.2; HALOT, p. 546.

³⁴⁹ Most Bible versions understand יְהוָה יִצְוֶה as 'Yahweh commanded/ordered' (CJB; JPS; NAU; NJB and RSV). Also Japhet, p. 371.

³⁵⁰ 'So Yahweh sent deber in Israel from morning until the appointed time...'; וַיִּתֵּן יְהוָה דְּבַר בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל מִהַבְּקָר וְעַד־עֵת מוֹעֵד (2 Sam 24:15).

5.5.7 1 Kings 8:37 and 2 Chronicles 6:28

1 Kgs 8:37

רָעַב כִּי־יִהְיֶה בְּאֶרֶץ דְּבַר כִּי־יִהְיֶה שְׂדֵפוֹן יִרְקוֹן אֲרָבָה חֲסִיל כִּי יִהְיֶה כִּי
יִצְרֶלּוּ אִיבּוֹ בְּאֶרֶץ שְׁעָרָיו כָּל־נֹנֵעַ כָּל־מַחֲלָה:

2 Chron 6:28

רָעַב כִּי־יִהְיֶה בְּאֶרֶץ דְּבַר כִּי־יִהְיֶה שְׂדֵפוֹן יִרְקוֹן אֲרָבָה וְחֲסִיל כִּי יִהְיֶה כִּי
יִצְרֶלּוּ אוֹיְבָיו בְּאֶרֶץ שְׁעָרָיו כָּל־נֹנֵעַ וְכָל־מַחֲלָה:

1 Kings 8 describes King Solomon offering praises to Yahweh at the dedication of the completed Temple.³⁵¹ The structure of the chapter follows a typical pattern in accordance with similar Mesopotamian ceremonies.³⁵² It falls into three major parts: vv. 1-13 describe the inauguration of the Temple by the bringing in of the Ark and its placing into the Holy of Holies; vv. 14-61 contain the king's blessing of the assembled people and his prayers to Yahweh; and vv. 62-66 end with celebration. The first and third sections provide the narrative framework for the middle section which contains a complex speech of Solomon.³⁵³ Cogan remarks that Solomon's prayer is 'crafted for maximum effect on the listener', and that it is intended both for Yahweh and for the assembled people (p. 291).

Several themes emerge from the prayer: the promise to David, the concern with the continuity of the dynasty, the centrality of the Temple, exodus and covenant.³⁵⁴

Solomon starts with a hymn of praise (vv. 14-21) in which he thanks Yahweh for fulfilling the promise to David (cf. 2 Sam 7). Then he addresses a personal petition to Yahweh asking him to keep the promise regarding the continuation of the dynasty (v. 23-26). Vv. 27-30 present a solution to the problem of Yahweh being transcendent and dwelling on earth in the Temple at the same time. The Temple will be the focal ³⁵¹ For this chapter see commentaries, e.g. DeVries, 1 Kings, pp. 113-128; Walsh, pp. 108-119; M. J. Mulder, 1 Kings 1-11, Historical Commentary on the OT (Leuven: Peeters, 1998), I, pp. 375-459; Cogan, pp. 276-293; M. A. Sweeney, 1 & 2 Kings, OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2007), pp. 125- 137.

³⁵² Cogan, p. 291; Sweeney, 1 & 2 Kings, p. 133.

³⁵³ The commentaries differ slightly on the division of the chapter. See n. 351 above for reference.

³⁵⁴ Scholars identify the 'central' theme variously. For example De Vries, 1 Kings, argues that Solomon's concern was Yahweh's faithfulness towards the Davidic dynasty (p. 125). Similarly Sweeney, 1 & 2 Kings, p. 133. Walsh also identifies this theme as the major concern of vv. 14-21 with a second important theme; the Temple is a 'house for the name' of Yahweh (pp. 112-113). For Cogan the central theme is Yahweh's transcendence and his dwelling on earth, i.e. the Temple (p. 291); and for Mulder there are several themes (p. 403).

point toward which the attention of Yahweh and the prayer of the people are directed.³⁵⁵

The core of the prayer consists of a series of seven petitions, describing hypothetical situations in which people would turn to Yahweh in/through the Temple.³⁵⁶ The petitions follow a common pattern. The petitioners (Israelite/ foreign individual or the people) are in need; turn to Yahweh in prayer in the Temple or turn toward the Temple; Yahweh hears the prayer and responds.³⁵⁷

The first petition in vv. 31-32 presents a case when two people are in disagreement; have to swear an oath but it is unclear who is right. It appeals to Yahweh to make the truth known.

The second (vv. 33-34), third (vv. 35-36) and fourth (vv. 37-40) petitions presuppose that Israel had sinned in some way against Yahweh and had been punished by the various known forms of punishment (cf. Deut 28 and Lev 26). Vv. 33-34 talk of the punishment in the form of defeat by enemy (בְּהִנָּגְףָּ ... לְפָנַי אֹיִב); in vv. 35-36 the punishment comes by drought (בְּהִעָצֵר שָׁמַיִם וְלֹא־יִהְיֶה מָטָר) and vv. 37-40 extend the punishment to all kinds of calamity: famine (רָעָב); deber (דֶּבֶר); blight (שִׁדְפוֹן) or mildew (יִרְקוֹן), locusts (אַרְבֵּה) or grasshopper (חֲסִיל);³⁵⁸ and every kind of disaster and disease (כָּל־נִגַּע כָּל־מַחֲלָה).³⁵⁹

Nothing specific emerges about deber from this passage; what is clear is that it is a form of punishment from Yahweh for the Israelites' sin. However, as most of the situations, i.e. the punishments referred to above, link this passage with ³⁵⁵ Cogan, p. 292.

³⁵⁶ According to DeVries, 1 Kings, there are only five original situations described in the prayer (vv. 31-32; 33-34; 35-36; 37-40; 41-43); the other two are late additions, vv. 44-45 being a repetition of vv.33-34 and vv. 46-53 relating to an exilic background (p.126).

³⁵⁷ Walsh, p. 114; Mulder, p. 403.

³⁵⁸ With NAU and NIV. RSV, JPS and NJB have 'caterpillar'. On this word see especially Mulder, pp. 431-432.

³⁵⁹ DeVries, 1 Kings, p.126; Walsh, p. 114; Cogan, p. 292; Sweeney, 1 & 2 Kings, pp. 134-135. For detailed discussion of each verse see Mulder, pp. 419-435.

J. Blair 5. Deber

Deuteronomy 28:15-68 as well as with Leviticus 26:16-39,³⁶⁰ we can argue that the deber referred to in v. 37 is the same as in Deut 28:21 and Lev 26:25.³⁶¹

The fifth petition, vv. 41-43, envisages a prayer from foreign worshippers of Yahweh. DeVries refers to it as ‘the most marvellously universalistic passage in the Old Testament’ as every foreigner will be heard by Yahweh.³⁶²

The sixth petition, vv. 44-45 is a prayer for victory before war, and the seventh, vv. 46-51 is a prayer by repentant exiles.

Solomon’s prayer of dedication of the Temple has a parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 6:12-42.³⁶³ Deber occurs in 2 Chron 6:28 which is (almost) the exact copy of 1 Kgs 8:37 therefore the passage is not discussed separately.³⁶⁴

5.5.8 2 Chronicles 7:13

v. 13

הֵן אֶעֱצֵר הַשָּׁמַיִם וְלֹא־יִהְיֶה מָטָר וְהֵן־אֶצְנֶה עַל־חֹב לְאֹכֹל הָאָרֶץ וְאִם־אֲשַׁלַּח
דְּבַר בְּעַמִּי:

2 Chronicles 7:12-22 thematically links to the texts discussed above (1 Kgs 8:14-61 and 2 Chron 6:12-42). It is Yahweh’s answer to Solomon’s prayer. It parallels 1 Kings 9:1-9 but it is a longer text. Vv. 12, 15-16 // 1 Kgs 9:3; vv. 17-22 // 1 Kgs 9:4-9. Vv. 13 and 14 do not appear in the 1 Kgs 9 text.³⁶⁵ These two verses are a ³⁶⁰ Cogan points to the following parallels: v. 33 // Deut 28: 25; v. 35 // Deut 28: 23-24; v. 37 // Deut 28: 21, 22, 27, 35, 38, 39, 42, 59-61; and v. 46 // Deut 28: 36-37, 64-68 (p. 292). See also Sweeney, 1 & 2 Kings, p. 135. Mulder also links the passage with Amos 4 (p. 431).

³⁶¹ Both in 1 Kgs 8:37 and Lev 26:25 deber occurs as a noun without articles or prepositions.

³⁶² 1 Kings, p. 126.

³⁶³ On this passage see commentaries, e.g. Myers, 2 Chronicles, pp. 31-38; Dillard, pp. 44-53; S. Japhet, pp. 596-605 (esp. pp. 596-597); Thompson, 1, 2 Chronicles, pp. 227-231.

³⁶⁴ Compare 1 Kgs 8:37:

רָעַב כִּי־יִהְיֶה בְּאֶרֶץ דְּבַר כִּי־יִהְיֶה שֶׁדָּפוֹן וַיִּרְקֹן אֶרְבֶּה חֲסִיל כִּי יִהְיֶה כִּי יֵצֵר־לוֹ אִיבוֹ בְּאֶרֶץ שְׁעָרָיו כָּל־נֹנֵעַ כָּל־מַחְלָה:

and 2 Chron 6: 28:

רָעַב כִּי־יִהְיֶה בְּאֶרֶץ דְּבַר כִּי־יִהְיֶה שֶׁדָּפוֹן וַיִּרְקֹן אֶרְבֶּה וְחֲסִיל כִּי יִהְיֶה כִּי יֵצֵר־לוֹ אוֹיְבָיו בְּאֶרֶץ
שְׁעָרָיו כָּל־נֹנֵעַ וְכָל־מַחְלָה:

³⁶⁵ Dillard, pp. 55-59; Japhet, pp. 607-609.

summary of Solomon's third and fourth petitions, lack of rain (1 Kgs 8:35-36 // 2 Cron 6:26-27) and affliction by the locusts (חֲנֹב) ³⁶⁶ and deber (1 Kgs 8: 37 // 2 Chron 6:28).³⁶⁷ From Yahweh's reply (vv. 17-22) the reason for punishment becomes clear: idolatry (this was missing from Solomon's prayer). What was expected of David is required of Solomon too, that is to obey Yahweh's commands and follow his laws. Turning away from him and worshipping other gods means disobedience and breaking of the covenant that brings down Yahweh's wrath and results in severe punishment (as detailed in Deut 28 and Lev 26). God's direct address to Solomon turns toward the people in vv. 19-22. Everything said applies to all of Israel.³⁶⁸

5.5.9 2 Chronicles 20:9

v. 9

אִם־תָּבוֹא עָלֵינוּ רָעָה חָרֵב שְׂפוּט וְדָבָר וְרָעַב נַעֲמָדָה לְפָנֵי הַבַּיִת הַזֶּה וּלְפָנֶיךָ כִּי
שָׁמָּה בַּבַּיִת הַזֶּה וְנִזְעַק אֵלֶיךָ מִצָּרֵתֵנוּ וְתִשְׁמַע וְתוֹשִׁיעַ:

Solomon's prayer appears in yet another version and context. Jehoshaphat quotes the prayer of temple-dedication, when Israel is threatened by a vast army approaching from Edom (vv. 1-2). Jehoshaphat panics. Initially he does not take action, his apparent resignation is expressed in v. 12, 'We do not know what to do.'³⁶⁹ However, he is not completely inactive, he orders a fast throughout the land and turns to Yahweh for help. Jehoshaphat's prayer is an 'emotionally forceful rhetoric'. Its tone is persuasive while trying to convince Yahweh of the necessity of his intervention.³⁷⁰ His appealing to Solomon's prayer is perhaps because Yahweh had promised to listen to and answer it.³⁷¹ He does not quote the prayer in full but only refers to three ³⁶⁶ A different word is used here for locust than in the parallel passages.

³⁶⁷ Japhet, p. 615.

³⁶⁸ Dillard, p. 59; Thompson, 1, 2 Chronicles, p. 236.

³⁶⁹ Japhet, p. 787.

³⁷⁰ Japhet, p. 788. Dillard characterises the prayer as a 'national lament' (p. 156).

³⁷¹ Dillard, p. 157.

J. Blair 5. Deber

of ‘the evils’ (רָעָה) that come against (תָּבוֹא עָלֵינוּ) the people, sword, deber and famine, חָרֵב שְׁפוּט וְדָבָר וְרָעַב.³⁷²

Sword, famine and deber all appear as nouns in the absolute state without definite article or prepositions. They are collectively called ‘evils’, and it is said that they ‘come against’ the people, thus paralleling the great army that is also ‘coming against you’ (בָּא עָלֶיךָ). This is the same expression as used of the blessings and curses ‘coming against you’ in Deut 28:1 and 15. In light of our argument on Deut 28:15-68, these punitive forces can be seen as personified.

5.5.10 Psalm 78

vv. 49-50

יִשְׁלַח־כֶּם חֲרוֹן אַפּוֹ עֲבָרָה וְזַעַם וְצָרָה מִשְׁלַחַת מִלְּאֲכֵי רָעִים:
יַפְלִס נְתִיב לְאֲפּוֹ לֹא־חֲשָׂךְ מִמּוֹת נַפְשָׁם וְחִתָּתָם לְדָבָר הַסִּגִּיר:

A long psalm of teaching (תּוֹרָה), 78 (Hebrew) lines, 72 verses, it recounts Israel’s history, focusing on Israel’s deliverance from Egypt and the wandering in the desert. In spite of all Yahweh’s miracles, all the great things he had done for the Israelites, they doubted him, deliberately challenged him and turned away from him again and again. They did not remember how God saved them from the oppressor, the Pharaoh of Egypt, forgot the signs and miracles God had given them in Egypt and in the desert.

Some (e.g. BDB) take the occurrence of דָּבָר in this psalm to be a reference to the fifth ‘plague’ in Exod 9:3, therefore to be understood as a ‘plague’ of the cattle, a murrain. This is true to the extent that we have here a reference to the deber of Exodus. However, in our discussion of Exod 9:3 and 15 we have argued that Deber can be regarded as personified, and that it appeared in parallel with the Hand of Yahweh. Looking at Ps 78:40-51 carefully we shall see that this interpretation is supported.

In v. 40 the poet goes back to the beginning of his story again (almost as a repetition of vv. 12-16) and recounts in more (but not exact) details the mighty acts of Yahweh in Egypt. Vv.44-48 recount the turning of the water to blood, sending of the horseflies, frogs, caterpillars, locusts, hail and frost (which killed the cattle³⁷³), culminating in v. 51 in the death of the first-born.³⁷⁴ Vv. 49-50 seems to be a recapitulation of the previous verses, at the same time leading to the final and most terrible act.

³⁷² Japhet asserts that שְׁפוּט could be taken as a fourth calamity (so RSV) in the light of Ezek 14:21 (p. 791). However, that is unnecessary; as she rightly notes ‘the distribution of the conjunctive waw’ supports the reading ‘sword of judgement’.

The poet uses personification to make his illustration more striking. We are made to feel the heat of Yahweh's burning anger (חַרוֹן אַפּוֹ, v. 49) and see the destroying angels (מַלְאֲכֵי רָעִים), Fury (עֲבָרָה), Anger (זַעַם) and Distress (צָרָה) with drawn-out swords as they swoop down on animals and humans alike.

V. 49 starts with a Piel impf. verb (שָׁלַח). This root is found in מְשַׁלְּחַת 'envoy' of angels of evil, emphasizing the fact that they have been sent by Yahweh. מַלְאֲכֵי רָעִים is best understood not as 'evil angels', but as angels, bringers of evil things upon the afflicted.³⁷⁵

V. 50 also starts with a Piel impf. verb (יָפַלַס). This + נָתַיב 'prepare a path, make way' (an expression that is a hapax legomenon) in the light of Hab 3:5 suggest a personification for the following nouns.³⁷⁶ Yahweh's anger (אַפּוֹ) in the previous verse is represented by עֲבָרָה זַעַם וְצָרָה, מַלְאֲכֵי רָעִים, and here by מָוֶת and דְּבָר, Death and Deber respectively.³⁷⁷

Thus here, as in the 2 Sam 24:13-15 and the parallel 1 Chron 21:12-14 passages we have an occurrence of דְּבָר together with the מְלַאֲךְ, suggesting the possibility of Deber being one of the מַלְאֲכֵי רָעִים,³⁷⁸ an instrument of Yahweh.

³⁷³ Some manuscripts have לַדָּבָר instead of לַבָּרָד in v.48; cf. cattle plague of Exod 9:3 (BHS).

³⁷⁴ The boils (Exod 9:8-12) and darkness (Exod 10:21-20) are not mentioned.

³⁷⁵ There are suggestions that מַלְאֲכֵי should be emended to מְלַאֲכִים (e.g. DCH, V, p.287; BHS crit. app.) but there is no need. Dahood, Psalms II, suggests taking the ם in מַלְאֲכֵי as 3rd sing. suffix and רָעִים as adjective, thus 'his pestiferous angels' (p. 244).

³⁷⁶ See also Dahood, Psalms II, pp. 244-245.

³⁷⁷ Other examples where death is personified are: Jer 9:20; Job 28:22; Ps 49:15; Mot and Sheol together in Isa 28:15,18 ; Isa 38:18; Hab 2:5 etc. See also discussion of the other passages relating to deber. In Prov 16: 14 we also have מַלְאֲכֵי מָוֶת, 'angels of death'.

³⁷⁸ The question of how the term מְלַאֲךְ is used arises. Its basic meaning is 'messenger', though their function is more than simply bearing messages (cf. Josh 6:25; 1 Sam 19:11; Judg 11:12-14; 2 Sam 5:11). The term refers to both human and heavenly messengers; their function is generally the same. (In most cases it refers to angels. See HALOT, pp. 585-586; DCH, V, pp. 285-288). Context must decide. Both HALOT and DCH take the term in the passages we discussed as 'angels'. On the 'angel of Yahweh' see TWOT; DCH, V, pp. 284-289; HALOT, II, pp. 585-586.

5.5.11 Amos 4:10

v. 10

שְׁלַחְתִּי בְּכֶם דְּבַר בְּדַרְדָּךְ מִצָּרִים הֲרַגְתִּי בַחֲרָב בַּחֲוָרִיכֶם עִם שְׁבִי סוּסֵיכֶם
וְאַעֲלֶה בְּאֵשׁ מִחֲנִיכֶם וּבְאַפְּכֶם וְלֹא־שִׁבְתֶּם עָדִי נְאֻם־יְהוָה:

Chapter 4 consists of two judgement oracles. Vv. 1-3 are directed against the rich women of the northern capital, Samaria,³⁷⁹ and then vv. 4-13 introducing a new theme, turn against the whole population.³⁸⁰ The narrative is concerned with the issue that Israel has not returned to God.³⁸¹

Vv. 4-5 appear as an invitation to the people to continue their sacrificing at two of the major sanctuaries, Bethel and Gilgal.³⁸² However, its tone is sarcastic; it has been called a ‘parody of a priestly torah’.³⁸³ The people are invited to come to these sacred places in order to sin. The verb פָּשַׁע is used twice in different forms. The basic ³⁷⁹ So S. M. Paul, Amos: A Commentary on the Book of Amos, Hermeneia (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1991), pp. 128-136; J. Jeremias, The Book of Amos: A Commentary, trans. by D. W. Stott, OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1998), pp. 63-65; J. H. Hayes, Amos, The Eighth-Century Prophet (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1988), pp. 138-142. On the other hand F. I. Andersen and D. N. Freedman, Amos: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1989), p. 419 and J. L. Mays, Amos: A Commentary, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1969), p. 71, argue that because of the mixed gender of the verbs used in the verses it is possible that a general audience was in mind. H. M. Barstad, The Religious Polemics of Amos, VTSupp 34 (Leiden : Brill, 1984) argues that chapter 4 forms a coherent speech unit and should be treated as a whole (p. 59).

³⁸⁰ Paul, pp. 138-156; Jeremias, pp. 65-80; Andersen and Freedman, Amos, pp. 425-457; Hayes, pp.142-150; Mays, Amos, pp. 73-84; H. W. Wolff, Joel and Amos: A Commentary on the Books of the Prophets Joel and Amos, transl. by H. W. Wolff, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1977), pp. 208-225.

³⁸¹ This is the understanding of most commentators, e.g. Paul, p. 143; Jeremias, p. 69; Mays, Amos, p. 77; Andersen and Freedman, Amos, p. 435; Hayes, p. 146. For a different interpretation see Barstad, Religious Polemics, pp. 65-67. He takes the verb שׁוּב in the sense of ‘to turn to’ which has implications for his understanding of the whole chapter.

³⁸² On Bethel and Gilgal in this passage see Andersen and Freedman, Amos, pp. 430-432; Hayes, pp. 142-144. For a more comprehensive discussion (including further references) see Barstad, Religious Polemics, pp. 47-58.

³⁸³ Quoted in Wolff, Amos, p. 211 and Paul, p. 138.

meaning of the verb is ‘rebellion’.³⁸⁴ However, the nature of the transgression is not clear.³⁸⁵

In vv. 6-11 we have a description of the various punishments that Yahweh afflicted the Israelites with albeit to no avail.³⁸⁶ The people have not returned to him.³⁸⁷ The description of the various calamities refers to past events,³⁸⁸ and these, besides being punitive, were meant to be pedagogical.³⁸⁹ However, the fivefold repetition of the expression ‘but you did not return to me’ at the end of vv. 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11 implies that it did not achieve this purpose. Most commentators note the similarities of this passage to the curses in Lev 26 and Deut 28, as well as to the prayer of Solomon in 1 Kgs 8.³⁹⁰

The listing of (seven) afflictions follows a similar pattern. Yahweh describes his punitive acts in first person,

v. 6a and I gave to you	וְגַם־אֲנִי נָתַתִּי לְכֶם
v. 7a and I withheld from you	וְגַם אֲנֹכִי מִנְעַתִּי מִכֶּם
v. 9a I smote you	הִכִּיתִי אֶתְכֶם

³⁸⁴ HALOT, p. 981. Paul notes that it is used in Amos 1:3-2:3 with reference to ‘crimes against humanity’ (p. 139). Barstad, Religious Polemics, argues that the context of פִּשְׁעַי in this passage clearly indicates that it describes the ‘participation of the Israelites in the rites performed at Bethel and Gilgal’ (p. 56).

³⁸⁵ On this issue see e.g. Paul, pp. 139-140. He asserts that the prophet is not accusing the people of sacrificing outside Jerusalem nor of sacrificing connected to idolatry. To him the charge reflects the opposition between prophets and priests. Mays, Amos, suggests that the prophet’s charge against Israel was that the people forgot about Yahweh in their worship, ‘The people themselves have displaced the Lord as the central reality of cult.’ (p. 77) Similarly, Jeremias, p. 68. Hayes thinks that ‘The context indicates that the sacrifices were condemned as another example of the self-indulgence of the ruling establishment.’ (p. 145) However, Barstad, Religious Polemics, has argued convincingly that the present context as well as others in Amos clearly indicate that the cult practiced at these two sanctuaries were ‘non-Yahwistic or strongly Yahwistic/syncretistic’ (cf. Amos 5:21-24). This is the most likely possibility; the punishments that are listed in the following verses are always inflicted on the Israelites when they are disobedient to Yahweh, and that usually means turning away from him in favour of other gods.

³⁸⁶ Contra Barstad, Religious Polemics, who argues that the list of vv. 6-11 should be regarded as ‘the proofs of a missionary’ trying to convince his audience that they should turn to Yahweh rather than follow their old practices (p. 67).

³⁸⁷ Compare the people’s rebellion against Yahweh in Num 14. See 5.5.5 above.

³⁸⁸ Andersen and Freedman, Amos, p. 437; Mays, Amos, p. 77; Paul, p. 143.

³⁸⁹ Jeremias, p. 69; Paul, p. 143.

³⁹⁰ The parallels are most clearly set out in Wolff, Joel and Amos, p. 213; Jeremias, pp. 70-72; Paul, pp. 143, 146-147; Andersen and Freedman, Amos, p. 440; Hayes, p. 148; Mayes, Amos, pp. 79-80; for a contrary view see Barstad, Religious Polemics, pp. 61-65.

v. 10a	I sent against you	שְׁלַחְתִּי בְכֶם
v. 11a	I overthrew you	הִפַּכְתִּי בְכֶם

V. 6 refers to famine expressed by the ‘euphemistic hapax legomenon’,³⁹¹ נְקִיוֹן חֶסֶד לְאֵהָם, literally ‘cleanness of teeth’, and the reference to ‘lack of food’, חֶסֶד לְאֵהָם. Its extensiveness is emphasised by two expressions, ‘in all your cities’, בְּכָל-עָרֵיכֶם, and ‘in all your places’, בְּכָל מְקוֹמֵיכֶם .

Vv. 7-8 describe the lack of rain, הַגֶּשֶׁם, i.e. drought. Yahweh withheld the rain at a crucial time (three months before harvest) which meant yet more famine as there would not have been anything to harvest. Paul notes that Yahweh’s assertion of sending rain on one city but not on another serves to emphasise the divine nature of the calamity.³⁹²

In v. 9 we read of the disasters that affect the crops, blight, שִׁדְדָן, mildew, יֵרֶקוֹן, in the gardens and vineyards,³⁹³ locusts, גִּזְזִים in the fig and olive trees.³⁹⁴

V. 10 tells us that deber was sent amongst the people just as in Egypt, שְׁלַחְתִּי בְכֶם מִצְרַיִם. The use of the verb שְׁלַחְתִּי (the same verb as often used in connection with deber) emphasises the fact that the calamities are sent by Yahweh. Just as in the previous verse, another calamity is referred to in this verse, ‘sword’. Sword and deber together threatened the Israelites in Exod 5:3 in case they disobeyed Yahweh’s command to sacrifice to him (another connection to the Exodus events). The actions of these two agents were deadly, young men and horses alike

³⁹¹ Paul, p. 144.

³⁹² Pp. 144-145. He also notes that drought and famine occur together in Mesopotamian curse lists and literature. For other examples of the motif of lack of rain as a form of punishment see Barstad, Religious Polemics, pp. 68-73.

³⁹³ The two words are used together in Deut 28:22; 1 Kgs 8:37 // 2 Chron 6:28; Hag 2:17. Paul notes that the first word ‘denotes desiccation caused by the sirocco’, and the second ‘refers to the brownish yellow withering colour of the grain’ (p. 146). See also Mays, Amos, p. 79.

³⁹⁴ Joel 1:4-7.

³⁹⁵ Some commentators (e.g. Andersen and Freedman, Amos, p. 443, and Hayes, p. 147) maintain that this deber was not the one of Exodus. However, there is no reason to doubt that by mentioning Egypt an allusion was meant here to the Exodus events. So also Paul, p. 147; Wolff, Joel and Amos, p. 221. One can also see a connection here to Num 14, where the Israelites were complaining and wanted to return to Egypt. In his anger Yahweh threatened them with the same deber as he sent to punish the Egyptians.

were killed; the stench of ‘your camp’, מִחֲנִיכֶם, referring to the stench of the dead corpses left in and around the camp.³⁹⁶

The calamities intensified gradually until the last one in v. 11 was the most disastrous of them all. The destruction is likened to the devastation of the two cities Sodom and Gomorrah. This expression ‘became paradigmatic for the completeness of the destruction.’³⁹⁷

In spite of all the severe punishments Israel did not turn from her ways; this fact is emphasised by the five times repetition (at the end of v. 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11) of the same expression, ‘yet you have not returned to me, declares the Lord’, וְלֹא־שָׁבַתֶם וְיִהְיֶה עָרֵי נְאֻם־יְהוָה. V. 12 is an affirmation that all this that has already befallen Israel will again strike them because they have not turned from their ways.³⁹⁸ A doxology follows in v. 13.³⁹⁹

5.5.12 Summary of other occurrences of deber

In summary we can say that in all the passages discussed deber occurs as a punishment sent from Yahweh. The sending is expressed most frequently by the verb שָׁלַח (Exod 9:15; Lev 26:25; Ps 78:49-50; Amos 4:10) and also by נָתַן (2 Sam 24:15; 1 Chron 21: 14). Yahweh is in control, he sends his agents (וַיִּשְׁלַח־תִּי; וַיִּתֵּן וְיִהְיֶה), brings them in (וַיִּבְאֵתִי, Lev 26:25); encounters (פָּגַע, Exod 5:3) and smites (נִכָּה, Num 14:12) the people through them (this expressed with כִּי + def. art. + noun). He will also cause deber to cling to the people until it kills them (Deut 28:21).

The personification of deber appears clearly in Deut 28; Exod 9; 2 Sam 24 with its parallel in 1 Chron 21, and Ps 78. Since the other passages are connected to either of the first two, it is possible that these passages also contain a personified deber. Exod 9 and 2 Sam 24 show a designation of deber as ‘the hand of Yahweh’ and ‘Blows’ (הַמִּנְפָּדָה), reminiscent of Yahweh’s evils and arrows. 2 Sam 24, 1 Chron 21 and Ps 78 clearly indicate that it was envisaged as one of Yahweh’s angels whose function is to punish.

³⁹⁶ Paul, p. 148; Andersen and Freedman, Amos, p. 443.

³⁹⁷ Paul, p. 149; Hayes, p. 147. It also occurs in Isa 1:9-10; 13:19; Jer 49:18; 50:40; etc.

³⁹⁸ Barstad, Religious Polemics, p. 59.

³⁹⁹ On doxologies in Amos see Barstad, Religious Polemics, pp. 79-80 and Paul, pp. 152-156.

The meaning of the term is uncertain, ‘destruction’ and in some cases more particularly ‘disease’ is the most likely translation.

5.6 Conclusion of deber

In order to determine whether deber is the name of a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible the present chapter examined every passage in which the term occurs. The investigation led to the following conclusions:

Although generally translated as ‘plague/pestilence’, deber is best understood as meaning in general ‘destruction’, possibly by infectious disease.⁴⁰⁰ The term is mostly used in a personified sense as an agent of Yahweh. However, there is no evidence that would point to a mythological figure behind the term, and there is nothing in the texts to support an interpretation that takes deber to be referring to a ‘demon’.

Ps 91, Hos 13 and Hab 3 (5.2), the three passages that are used to support this view, present deber as a personified dangerous force which brings death and destruction. As such he appears as one of Yahweh’s agents who carries out his punishment or simply emphasises his awesome power as a member of his retinue. Ps 91 presents these agents as Yahweh’s angels. This is also clearly the case in Ps 78 and 2 Sam 24.

In the 17 occurrences in Jeremiah (5.3) it most often appears with ‘sword’ and ‘famine’ (15x), deadly forces that always come as a punishment from Yahweh for the Israelites’ disobedience (mostly idolatry). Although its personification is only clearly suggested in one passage (Jer 21:6), the others also offer this possibility.

In Ezekiel (5.4) also (11x) deber occurs as a personified deadly force accompanied by others; often by ‘sword’ and ‘famine’, but other elements such as dam (bloodshed) and hayyah ra’ah (beings of evil) also occur. They all are presented as Yahweh’s agents of punishment.

This is also the case in all the other occurrences of the term (5.5). Some passages present the personified deber more clearly (Deut 28, Exod 9, 2 Sam 24, Ps 78) than others but there are links between these and the latter passages which suggest that the term could be taken as personified in these too.

⁴⁰⁰ See also summaries in 5.2.4; 5.3.10; 5.4.9 and 5.5.12.

J. Blair 5. Deber

We have argued that when personified, deber is one of Yahweh's angels, one of the malache ra'im.⁴⁰¹ In fact there is no evidence to suggest that this was one particular angel and that thus deber would be a proper noun. It is rather a function. Any of Yahweh's angels could be a deber, a bringer of 'disease' or 'destruction' which in most cases results in death.

⁴⁰¹ Hayyah ra'ah (Ezek 5:17; 14:15; 33:27;), along with 'arrows' (Deut 32:23; Ezek 5:16), 'blows' (Exod 9:15; 2 Sam 21, 25), 'evils' (Deut 32:23), 'scourges' (Ezek 14:21) should be understood in parallel with the מְלָאכֵי רָעִים as other designations for these agents of Yahweh who bring evil upon the people as punishment.

CHAPTER 6: QETEB IN THE HEBREW BIBLE

6.1. Introduction

קֵטֵב occurs 4 times in the Hebrew Bible, in Deut 32:24; Ps 91:6; Hos 13:14 and Isa 28:2.¹ Chapter 2 (2.5) has shown that the general consensus regarding qeteb is that it is the name of a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible. It was also demonstrated that this is based on the term’s occurrence with deber and reshef, also supposedly ‘demons’, and on scant ancient Near Eastern and post-biblical Jewish material, rather than on a careful reading of the texts.² Thus it becomes necessary that any conclusions regarding qeteb in the Hebrew Bible should be based on an examination of the Old Testament passages.

The present chapter therefore takes a close look at the passages where qeteb occurs in order to determine its meaning, if it is the name of a ‘demon’, and whether there is a mythological figure behind the texts. Psalm 91 and Hosea 13 have been discussed in detail in the previous chapter (5.2.1 and 5.2.2) thus only a summary of them will be included in the present chapter. Deuteronomy 32 and Isaiah 28 are examined in detail.

6.2 Psalm 91:6

From the analyses of the psalm in the previous chapter we have seen that the dangerous forces that appeared to threaten the believer in vv. 5-6 are best taken as Yahweh’s angels referred to in v. 11. The parallelism of vv. 5-9a and vv. 9b-13, as well as other instances of deber being clearly identified as one of Yahweh’s angels who brings as a punishment, death, destruction, in many instances in the form of disease, support this hypothesis.³

We have also argued that deber was best taken to mean ‘disease’ and qeteb referring to some form of ‘destruction’, however, nothing specific can be said about its meaning. Attempts have been made to link qeteb to ‘sunstroke’⁴ or hot weather,⁵ on the basis of v. 6 of the psalm. However, as we have seen, the reference to night and day (darkness and midday) does not mean that the forces referred to have to be associated with night or day/midday respectively. Deber was nowhere specifically associated with night time activity, and there is no reason to link qeteb to midday. A translation such as ‘destruction’ or ‘devastation’ would indicate the result of the activity of this agent/angel of Yahweh.

¹ Of these, in Deut 32 it appears in parallel with קֵטֵב, in Ps 91 and Hos 13:14 in parallel with קֵטֵב (in company with שָׂאֵל and מָוֶת); only in Isa 28:2 does it appear on its own. All of these texts are poetical.

² See 2.5.2 and 2.7.

³ See discussion of Ps 91 in 5.2.1 and summary in 5.2.4.

6.3 Hosea 13:14

Similarly to Psalm 91, this passage has also been analysed in detail in the previous chapter.⁶ Qeteb here appears along with Deber, Mot and Sheol, as personified forces of destruction and death. They are Yahweh’s agents whom he uses to punish the Israelites because they have turned to the worship of other gods. The punishment as in other similar cases is complete destruction. It has been argued that the passage does not indicate the form of the punishment, only the result, death. Therefore the more general translation of ‘devastation’ and ‘destruction’ was suggested as one that points out the parallelism between the two terms.

6.4 Deuteronomy 32: 24

vv. 23-25

אֶסְפֶּה עָלֵימוֹ רְעוֹת חֲצֵי אֶכְלֶה-בָּם:
מִזֵּי רָעַב וּלְחָמִי רֶשֶׁף וְקִטָּב מִרִירֵי וְשֵׁן-בְּהִמּוֹת אֲשַׁלַּח-בָּם עִם-חַמַּת זֶהְלִי עֶפְרַיִם:
מִחוּץ תִּשְׁכַּל-חֶרֶב וּמִחֲדָרִים אֵימָה גַם-בַּחּוּר גַּם-בְּתוּלָה יוֹנֵק עִם-אִישׁ שִׁיבָה:

I shall heap Evils on them, my Arrows I shall spend on them.

(They shall be) wasted by Famine and devoured by Plague and Bitter Scourge,
I shall send the Fang of Wild animals on them with the Poison of Snakes.

Outside Sword shall destroy,

⁴ T. Gaster, Myth, p. 770.

⁵ De Moor, ‘O Death’, p. 101.

⁶ See above 5 2.2 and 5.2.4.

and in the chambers Terror from young man and virgin;
the suckling child with the man of old age.

The Song of Moses bears similarities to some of the other passages we discussed – e.g. v. 11 cf. Psalm 91; vv. 17-21 cf. Hosea 13; vv. 23-25 cf. Jeremiah and Ezekiel passages where sword, famine, disease and wild animals/beings of evil occur together, though here we have reshet, ‘plague’ instead of deber, ‘disease’, as elsewhere. Van der Toorn believes that the passage has much in common with Hab 3:5,⁷ and R. Bergley that it is linked (linguistically) to early Isaianic passages (chs 1, 5, 28 and 30).⁸ J.G. McConville notes specific analogies with Ps 78.⁹

The poem can be divided as follows:

vv. 1-3: Introduction: invocation

vv. 4-14: PAST: Yahweh’s faithfulness and Israel’s sinfulness

vv. 4-5: contrasting Yahweh-people

vv. 6-7: invitation to think back to the beginning vv. 8-9: Yahweh became the god of Israel (his people/Jacob)

vv. 10-14: Yahweh’s care for Jacob (i.e. Israel)

vv. 15-18: The people’s sin: worship and sacrifice to other gods

vv. 19-25: God’s punishment of Israel

vv. 19-21: sin => anger => punishment

vv. 22-25: further punishments

vv. 26-27: Yahweh considers suspending Israel’s punishment

vv. 28-38: FUTURE: Yahweh’s punishment of Israel’s enemy

vv. 28-34: description of Israel’s enemy

vv. 35-38: Yahweh’s vengeance

vv. 39-42: Yahweh proclaims himself, ‘only god’, no other beside him

v. 43: Celebration of God’s deliverance

⁷ ‘The Theology of Demons in Mesopotamia and Israel’, in A. Lange, etc. eds, Die Dämonen, pp. 61-83 (p. 63).

⁸ ‘The Song of Moses (Deuteronomy 32.1-43) and Isaianic Prophecies: A Case of Early Intertextuality?’, JSOT 28 (2003), 33-54.

⁹ Deuteronomy, Apollos OT Commentary 5 (Leicester: Apollos, 2002), pp. 444-462, (esp. p. 452). See also J. H. Tigay, ‘Excursus 30’, in Deuteronomy, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1996), pp. 508-513, (esp. p. 511).

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

Vv. 1-3 and v. 43 frame the poem. It begins with an invocation to heavens and earth to listen and hear the words and teaching of the poet (Moses), and ends in a celebratory tone summoning the nations and his people to rejoice. The merismus, הַשָּׁמַיִם ... הָאָרֶץ, ‘heaven and earth’ convey the universality of the teaching; these words are for all to hear. Beside the parallels, ‘heaven’ and ‘earth’ are personified; they listen (הֶאֱזִינֵנוּ) and hear (וְהִשְׁמַעַתְנוּ). The desired effect of the teaching is set out in a beautiful set of four similes (v. 2):

like rain	fall	my teaching	לְקַחֵי	יַעֲרֵף כַּמָּטָר
like the dew drop down		my speech	אִמְרָתִי	תִּזְלַח כַּטֵּל like raindrops		on the grass	עַל־דְּשָׁא	כַּשְׁעִירִים ¹⁰
like showers		on the herbs	עַל־עֵשֶׂב	וְכַרְבִּיבִים

The next 11 + 4 verses (vv. 4-14 + vv. 15-18) together with 11 + 4 verses (vv. 28- 38 + vv. 39- 42) at the end envelope the middle section of the poem, vv. 19-27.

Vv. 4-14 concentrate on the past, Yahweh’s faithfulness is contrasted to Israel’s sinfulness. V. 4 describes Yahweh as the Rock (הַצִּיּוֹר), God of faithfulness (אֱלֹהֵי אֱמוּנָה), Righteous and Upright (צַדִּיק וְיֹשֵׁר) whose work is perfect (תְּמִים פְּעֻלּוֹ), whose ways are justice (כָּל־דְּרָכָיו מִשְׁפָּט), in whom there is no injustice (וְאֵי עוֹל). God’s righteousness is emphasized here thus Israel’s sinfulness stands in greater contrast (v. 5)¹¹. In turn, in v. 5 they are described as having acted corruptly (שָׁחַת), as if they were no children of God (לֹא בְנֵי), perverse and crooked (עֲקָשׁ וּפְתִלְתֵּל) as opposed to Yahweh who is righteous and upright (v. 4). In v. 6 they are also called brainless (נִבְּלִים) and not-wise (וְלֹא חֲכָמִים). The father and child metaphor is often used to describe the relationship of Yahweh and Israel.¹² It continues in vv. 6-7. The ¹⁰ It is clear from the context that the word refers to some kind of rain. It is parallel with רַב־בִּיבִים, the meaning of which is ‘heavy showers’ (HALOT, pp. 1178-1179). N. Snaith argues that this cannot refer to some ‘gentle showers’ but instead to ‘heavy showers which usher in the rains’, so in turn שְׁעִירִים must mean ‘the storm rain’, ‘the heavy soaking rain’. He derives the word from the root שַׁעַר II = סַעַר; cf. סַעֲרָה, ‘the storm wind’. See ‘Meaning’, pp. 115-116. For other possible translations see HALOT, pp. 1341-1342. In any case the point of these similes seems to be to emphasize the desired effect of the teaching. As water (in the form of rain, dew, showers or raindrops; light or heavy rain) is essential for the life and growth of plants, so are the words of this teaching for the life and growth of the people. Water and teaching are both life-giving forces.

¹¹ On the difficulties concerning the translation of this verse see the commentaries, e.g. Tigay, p. 301; Christensen, pp. 791, 795; McConville, pp. 444, 448; Craigie, Deuteronomy, p. 377 n. 15.

¹² Deut 14:1; Exod 4:22; Jer 3:19; 31:8, 20; Isa 43:6; 63:8; Mal 3:17; Hos 2:1, etc.

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

caused him grief (כַּעַס), so he despised them (וַיִּנְאָץ), and decided to turn away from them (turn his face away from them, אֶסְתִּירָה פָּנַי מֵהֶם, vv.19-20b).

V. 20c and d echo v. 5, God’s children are ‘a treacherous generation’ (דֹּר תִּהְפֹּכֶת), ‘children with no faithfulness in them’ (בָּנִים לֹא־אֱמָן בָּם). The contrast between Yahweh and his people is deepened further here. In v. 4 Yahweh was described as a God of faithfulness (אֱלֹ אֱמוּנָה), whereas Israel here is referred to as ‘children with no faithfulness in them’.

V. 21 relates how God shall punish Israel in the same manner as they have treated him:

They	rouse Yahweh to jealousy with no-gods	הֵם קִנְאוּנִי בְּלֹא־אֱלֹ
Yahweh	rouses them to jealousy with no-people	וְאֲנִי אֶקְנִיאֵם בְּלֹא־עַם
They	caused Yahweh grief with their idols	כַּעֲסוּנִי בְּהַבְלֵיהֶם
Yahweh	causes them grief with a foolish nation	אֶכְעִסֵם בְּגוֹי נָבָל ¹⁵

The term for idols, הַבְּלִים is pejorative, literally it means ‘vapour, breath’, and it refers to their emptiness, unreal nature. God shall punish Israel with a foolish nation for they themselves have been foolish (לְ עַם נָבָל in v. 6). The use of the same verbs creates a dramatic effect; it alludes to the ‘eye for eye’ concept. God’s revenge measures up exactly to the people’s sin. They committed the greatest sin against Yahweh, therefore his anger is great and their punishment devastating. There is a vivid description of the punishment in vv. 22-25. The fire is a metaphor for Yahweh’s anger¹⁶ and it is personified here (v. 22).

It will burn to the depths of Sheol	וְתִקַּד עַד־שְׂאוֹל
It will devour the earth and its produce	וְתֹאכַל אֶרֶץ וּבְקָלָהּ
It will set fire to the foundations of the mountains	וְתִלְהֹט מוּסְדֵי הַרִים

This thorough destruction is probably brought about by war; the enemy is the no-people, the foolish nation of v. 21c and d. However, Yahweh is determined to unleash (אֶסְפְּדָה) all his destructive forces: ‘evils’, רָעוֹת and ‘my arrows’, חֲצֵי, on Israel. Vv. 23-25 enlist seven¹⁷ other forces.¹⁸

¹⁵ I have changed the word order of the Hebrew to show clearer the correspondence of the terms.

¹⁶ Cf. Deut 4:24. We have the same expression in Jer 15:14.

¹⁷ Tigay notes that the number seven expresses the comprehensiveness of the destruction (p. 308).

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

v. 24a	Famine	רָעַב
v. 24b	Plague ¹⁹	רָשַׁף
v. 24c	Bitter Scourge ²⁰	וְקָטַב מְרִירִי
v. 24d	Fang of Wild Animals	וְשֵׁן-בְּהֵמוֹת
v. 24e	Poison of Snakes ²¹	חֲמַת זֶחָלִי עֶפְרָר
v. 25a	Sword	חֶרֶב
v. 25b	Terror ²²	אִימָה

V. 24 is difficult to translate. The main verb seems to be the Piel imperfect אֲשַׁלַּח the other, a masculine plural Qal passive participle, וְלִזְחָמִי, serves more as an adjective. מְזִי is a hapax legomenon.²³ שָׁלַח can be taken as referring to the sending of Famine, Reshef, Qeteb, as well as the Wild Animals and the Snakes. These are the ‘Evils’ and ‘Arrows’ referred to in v. 23. The ‘sucking out/wasting’ by Famine, the ‘eating’ by Reshef and Qeteb suggest that these are personified, as are the ‘Fang of the Wild Animals’ and the ‘Poison of Snakes’. In v. 25 Sword, and Terror ‘shall make childless/bereave’, תִּשְׁכַּל, yet another Piel imperfect verb, which also points to the personification of these two. Thus in vv. 23-25 we have a series of abstract concepts and objects personified along with a series of Piel or Hiphil verbs (שָׁפַח, שָׁלַח, שָׁכַל, שָׁפַח) that give a vivid illustration and emphasise the intensity and seriousness of the destruction. In Ps 78:49-50 Yahweh’s anger was unleashed on the Egyptians as a band of destroying angels, the Angels of Evil; one of these was Deber. I suggest that here too, the Evils and the Arrows, i.e. Reshef and Qeteb are Yahweh’s Angels of Evil as in Ps 78:49-50.²⁴

¹⁸ Famine and disease/deber are natural consequences of war and occur frequently together in Jeremiah, Ezekiel. Ezek 14:21 describes sword, famine, evil beings and deber as God’s four scourges.

¹⁹ RSV, NIV: ‘consuming pestilence’; NJB: ‘eaten away by plague’; McConville: ‘consumed by pestilence’; Tigay and Christensen: ‘ravaging plague’. CJB has ‘fever’; JPS ‘fiery bolt’. LXX has ‘birds’. Reshef is taken here as ‘plague’ in a general sense as some kind of calamity.

²⁰ RSV, NIV have ‘deadly plague’; NJB: ‘bitter scourge’; CJB: ‘bitter defeat’; JPS: ‘bitter destruction’; McConville: ‘bitter plague’; Tigay and Christensen: ‘deadly pestilence’. ‘Bitter scourge’ (cf. Ezek 14:21) or ‘bitter destruction’ (cf. Ps 91:6) would both be suitable translations. LXX has σπισθοτονος αωιατος, which even for Caquot can be a misinterpretation (see above 2.5 p. 38). Vg has morsus, ‘biting, sting’.

²¹ Literally: ‘crawlers in dust’.

²² All translate ‘terror’ (CJB: ‘panic’). The term only occurs in 4 other verses: Gen 15:12; Job 30:20; 41:6 and Isa 33:18.

²³ One Heb ms., Cairo Geniza fragments read מְזִי, ‘sucked out, empty’ instead (BHS crit.app.)

²⁴ See 5.6.

The destruction envisaged was a complete one as the two merisms in 25c and d illustrate.

‘Young man and virgin’ (נַם־בְּחֹרַר נַם־בְּתוּלָה), ‘suckling child and man of old age’ (יֹנֵק עִם־אִישׁ שִׁבְיָה) were all to perish.

It comes as a surprise then in vv. 26-27 that Yahweh seems to change his mind about punishing Israel. Israel will be saved from total destruction not because Yahweh takes pity on them but because Yahweh wants to protect his own reputation.²⁵ As the other nations are a foolish people they would not realize that Israel’s punishment comes from Yahweh and in it his power is expressed, but they would see it as his weakness. Thus, though Israel deserves the punishment, God decides to let go of it. Instead, he turns on Israel’s enemies.

The next section, vv. 28-38 describes the punishment of the other nations. Vv. 28-31 describe the enemy as void of counsel (אֲבָר עֲצוֹת), lacking in understanding (אִין בְּהֵם תְּבוּנָה). If they were wise (לֹו תִכְמוֹ) they would understand or see into their future (בְּיָנוּ לְאַחֲרֵיתָם), meaning that they would realise that their victory was not their own doing but it was Yahweh’s will; only with his help could such a thing as one man pursuing a thousand (אִיכָה יִרְדֶּף אֶחָד אֶלְפֵי) happen (v. 30). It seems that vv. 28-31 are the words of the poet, an explanation or further elaboration on what God said in the previous verses.²⁶ From v. 32 on Yahweh speaks again. The enemy will endure the same destiny as the people of Sodom and Gomorrah (v. 32). The metaphor of poisoned wine (v. 33) illustrates their fate. Yahweh will take vengeance on the enemy for the way they treated Israel, their day of disaster approaches (כִּי קָרוֹב יוֹם אִידָם, v. 35).

From v. 36 the focus turns back on Israel. Yahweh will relent (יִתְנַחֵם)²⁷ from punishing them further after all their suffering.

Vv. 37-39 point out the folly of Israel; they turned away from Yahweh for the sake of gods who accepted their offerings (‘ate the fat of their offerings’, חָלַב זִבְחֵימֹו, ‘drank the wine of their libations’, יִין נְסִיכָם, יִשְׁתּוּ) but were unable to help ²⁵ 1 Sam 12:22.

²⁶ Tigay: ‘The poem interrupts God’s words to explain the flawed reasoning that would lead the enemy to misrepresent the facts.’ (p. 310)

²⁷ יִתְנַחֵם is translated variously, RSV and NIV: ‘have compassion’; NJB: ‘he will take pity’; JPS: ‘take revenge for’.

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

them in return (v. 37, 'where are their gods?', אֵי אֱלֹהֵימוֹ). Calling these idols 'rock' (צוּר) is ironic, as in v. 31, since they seemed unable to rise up and shield Israel (v. 38c and d).

Vv. 39-42 constitute the counterpart of vv. 15-18 where Israel's sin was spelled out, they sacrificed to shedim, to no-gods (v. 17), but now they can see that there is no other god beside Yahweh. He is the One, אֲנִי אֱנִי הוּא וְאֵין אֱלֹהִים עִמָּדִי.

He declares his uniqueness in vv. 39-41 and his intentions of punishing Israel's enemies even though he used them as his instruments in punishing Israel. Their punishment will be equal to the one envisaged earlier for Israel; the personification of Sword and Arrows in v. 42 give a vivid picture:

v. 42a	God's Arrows shall be intoxicated by blood	אֲשָׁפִיר חֲצֵי מָדָם
v. 42b	his Sword will devour flesh	וְתִרְבִּי תֹאכַל בָּשָׂר

Finally the poem concludes in a celebratory tone. V. 43 is an invocation to all the nations to proclaim Yahweh's deliverance of his people Israel and the punishment of their enemy.²⁸

6.5 Isaiah 28:2

v.2

הִנֵּה חֹזֵק וְאִמָּץ לְאֲדֹנָי כְּזֶרֶם בְּרָד שֶׁעַר קָטַב כְּזֶרֶם מַיִם כְּבִירִים שֹׁטְפִים הַנִּיחַ
לְאֶרֶץ בְּיָד:

²⁸ Scholars argue that v. 43 in the MT is incomplete and that a Qumran manuscript and the LXX are closer to the original text. MT reads: הִרְגִּינוּ גוֹיִם עִמּוֹ כִּי דָם-עֲבָדָיו יִקּוּם

וְנִקְּמָם וְשִׁיב לְצַרְיָו וְכַפֵּר אֶדְמָתוֹ עִמּוֹ:

Qumran text:

O heavens, rejoice with Him,
Bow to Him, all divinities
For he'll avenge the blood of His sons,
And wreak vengeance on His foes,
Requite those who reject Him,
And will cleanse His people's land.

NJB is following this suggestion and has for v.43 a and b the following:

Heavens rejoice with him,
Let all the children of God pay him homage!
Nations, rejoice with his people,
Let God's envoys tell of his power!
For more discussion see Tigay, pp. 513-518.

LXX:

O heavens, rejoice with Him.
Bow to him, all sons of the divine.
O nations, rejoice with His people
And let all angels of the divine strengthen themselves in Him.

Behold, the Lord has a Mighty and Strong one,
like a storm of Hail, a tempest of Destruction;
like a storm of Mighty Waters, engulfing,
through (his) hand he throws to the ground.

Isaiah 28 is the first of several poems (8 chapters, possibly 22 poems) on Israel and Judah. Chapter 28 can be divided into 4 parts²⁹:

vv. 1-6: oracle against the drunkards of Ephraim (שְׁכָרֵי אֶפְרַיִם)

vv. 7-13: oracle against drunken priests and prophets (כֹּהֲנֵי וְנָבִיא)

vv. 14-22: oracle against false counsellors (אֲנָשֵׁי לְצֹן)³⁰

vv. 23-29: a parable (אֲמֶרֶתִי//קוֹלִי)

The poem uses the metaphor of drunkards to illustrate the state the Northern Kingdom found itself in (vv.1-6 and vv. 7-13), then turns towards Jerusalem and its leaders (vv. 14-22) in a polemic tone, and ends with a parable of the farmer.

V. 1 begins in the conventional woe-oracle manner with הוֹי , then four pairs of parallels³¹ follow:

Crown – fading flower ³²	נִבֵּל ³³	וְצִיץ ³⁴	//	עֲטָרֶת ³⁵
Pride - beauty of his glory	תְּפֹאֲרֹתַי ³⁶	צְבִי ³⁷	//	נְאוֹת ³⁸

²⁹J. D. W. Watts, Isaiah 1-33, WBC 24 (Waco: Word Books, 1985), p. 362, and Oswalt, pp. 501-504, divide the chapter into three parts: vv. 1-13, vv. 14-22, and vv. 23-29. Kaiser has vv. 1-4; 5-6; 7-13; 14-22 and 23-29 (pp. 236-263). M. J. O’Kane, ‘Isaiah 28-33: A Literary and Contextual Analysis’, PhD Thesis (Edinburgh, 1989), pp.17-99; Seitz, pp. 209-210, and NJB see four parts, which I also follow.

³⁰ Prov 1:22; 29:8.

³¹ W. H. Irvin, Isaiah 28-33: Translation with Philological Notes, Biblica et Orientalia 30 (Rome: Biblical Institute Press, 1977), p. 4.

³² So NJB; NIV; RSV, HALOT (v.3: 1023) and Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 220. Irvin: ‘fading garland’; Watts, Isaiah 1-33, ‘drooping blossom’; Oswalt, p. 501, ‘fading blossom’.

³³ נִבֵּל means ‘to wither, decay’; it refers to the decaying of flowers in Is 40:7, and of grass in Ps 37:2 (HALOT v.2: 663; see also O’Kane, p. 21). The phrase צִיץ נִבֵּל also appears in Isa 40:7.

³⁴ O’Kane, p. 21, notes that both the verb and the noun occur most commonly as part of a simile/image ‘to express the fleeting quality of a person’s life’ (cf. Job 14:2; Ps 72:16; 90:6; 103:15; Isa 40:6-8).

³⁵ In Isa the noun occurs in 28:1, 3, 5; 62:3; elsewhere in 2 Sam 12:30; Job 19:9; 31:36; Ps 21:4; Jer 13:18; Ezek 16:12; 21:31; 23:42; Prov 4:9; 12:4; 14:24; 16:31; 17:6; Lam 5:16; Zech 6:11, 14.

³⁶ It is frequently used in Isaiah (of 47 total occurrences in the OT, 18 are in Isa). O’Kane shows that in Isa 1-39 the word has positive connotations only in two instances, in 4:2 and 28:5. The rest of the occurrences (10:12; 13:19; 20:5; 28:1, 4) carry a negative connotation: ‘it is a self-proclaimed glory

Ephraim – head of lush valley

אַפְרַיִם \\\ ראש גֵּיא־שְׁמָנִים³⁹

Drunkard – struck down by wine

שְׁכָרִי \\\ הִלּוּמִי יַיִן

The reference to the drunkards of Ephraim and their headdress⁴⁰ can be taken literally as directed against a group of drunken people,⁴¹ as well as taken further to point out the ‘decadence’ of the capital of Ephraim, Samaria.⁴² Kaiser sees a double meaning behind the metaphor, in the sense that the drunkenness of Ephraim could refer to ‘their complete confusion of belief and blindness to the signs of the times’ (p. 205). This is possible as prophetic speeches carry deeper meanings.⁴³

In v. 2 we have a scene of storm-imagery which according to most commentators describes Assyria.⁴⁴ However, they disagree as to the identity of the person of the ‘mighty and strong of the Lord’, חֲזַק וְאַמֵּץ לְאֲדֹנָי.⁴⁵ חֲזַק וְאַמֵּץ is a word-pair,⁴⁶ and it refers to Yahweh’s agent of destruction. The beginning of the verse with הִנֵּה emphasizes the fact that the ‘mighty and strong one’ is coming from Yahweh, it is on Yahweh’s command and with his authority that the destruction takes place. The force of the destruction is described by two striking similes:

on the part of the nations and of its nature cannot last. This idea is reinforced in 28:1-4 by the phrase זֵיִן נִבֵּל which precedes the phrase צָבִי תִפְאֶרְתּוֹ (pp. 23-24).

³⁷ The word usually describes the ‘beauty’ or ‘glory’ of the land cf. Jer 3:19; Ezek 20:6, 16; 25:9; 36:20; Dan 8:9; 11:16, 41, 45; but is also used in other contexts (2 Sam 1:19; Isa 4:2; 13:19; 23:9; 24:16).

³⁸ מְאֹדָה means ‘majesty, pride’, and mostly refers to the majesty of Yahweh (Ps 89:10; 93:1; Isa 12:5; 26:10). Here it is more likely to mean ‘pride’ as in Ps 17:10.

³⁹ In Isa 25:6 and 28:1, 4 it refers to luxury. On the difficulties of the last line of v.1 see Irwin, pp. 6-7; also Oswalt, pp. 5-7.

⁴⁰ Irwin notes that תִּפְאֶרְתּוֹ ... עֲטֹרָתוֹ ‘crown... fading flowers’ forms a stereotyped phrase which is separated here, cf. Isa 62:3; Jer 13:18; Ezek 16:12; 23:42; Prov 4:9; 16:31 (pp. 4-5).

⁴¹ Kaiser, p. 239; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 220-221.

⁴² B. S. Childs, Isaiah (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2001), p. 205. Also Watts, Isaiah 1-33, p. 362; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 220-221.

⁴³ A. Gileadi, The Literary Message of Isaiah (New York: Hebraeus Press, 1994), p. 19.

⁴⁴ P. D. Miscall, Isaiah (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993), p. 73; Watts, Isaiah 1-33, pp. 362-363; Oswalt, p. 507; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 221.

⁴⁵ According to Watts, Isaiah 1-33, pp. 362-363, it is Shalmaneser (Isa 10:3; 2 Kgs 17:3-6) or Sargon II (2 Kgs 17:6), and to Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, it is Tiglat-Pileser III (p. 221).

⁴⁶ Watts, Isaiah 1-33, cf. study of Laberge of its OT occurrences (p. 362).

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

like a storm of Hail, a tempest of Destruction
like a storm of Mighty Waters, engulfing ...

כְּזֶרֶם בָּרָד שֶׁעַר קָטָב⁴⁷
כְּזֶרֶם מַיִם כְּבִירִים שֹׁטְפִים

Irwin notes the pattern of ‘storm...tempest...storm’ (זֶרֶם ... שֶׁעַר ... זֶרֶם) which is lost in most Bible translations (p. 8).⁴⁸

We note the similarity of this passage to Hos 13:7-8; there Yahweh the Shepherd turns against his sheep to destroy them. The series of similes where Yahweh is likened to a lion, a leopard, a she-bear, a lion again and a wild animal, illustrates this destruction. Here, it is the strong and mighty of the Lord, הַזֶּזֶק וְאַמֵּץ לְאֲדָנָי who brings the destruction. Again a series of powerful similes, parallelism and word repetition illustrate this destruction vividly. They give us a sense of overpowering and complete desolation; against such mighty forces one is powerless. The emphasis is on destruction and the poet makes this more striking by personifying, as we have seen elsewhere, the forces that cause it. The parallelism brings this out very well:

הַזֶּזֶק וְאַמֵּץ לְאֲדָנָי
כְּזֶרֶם בָּרָד
שֶׁעַר קָטָב
כְּזֶרֶם מַיִם כְּבִירִים

Thus here too, we find Barad, Qeteb and Mighty Waters as personified and as agents of the Strong and Mighty of the Lord, who ultimately is also an agent of Yahweh. Their function is to bring destruction which comes as a punishment from Yahweh. There is nothing to support a demonological interpretation of qeteb here.⁴⁹

The imagery of vv.1-2 returns in vv. 3-4 with the same phrases/words (עֲטָרַת יְאוֹת (אֲשֶׁר עַל־רֹאשׁ נְיָא שְׁמָנִים, שְׂכוּרֵי אֶפְרַיִם). Again there is a double meaning beside the literal one. It is clear that by the ‘proud garland’ of Ephraim’s drunkards that will be ‘trampled under foot’ (תִּרְמָסְנָהוּ⁵⁰), it is Samaria that is intended here, and ⁴⁷ See discussion below.

⁴⁸ NIV: ‘hailstorm...wind...driving rain’; NJB: ‘storm...tempest...immense flood’; RSV: ‘storm...tempest...storm’.

⁴⁹ Contra Caquot, ‘Quelques...’, pp. 67-68, and others. See above 5.2. The available evidence is not enough to permit us to draw such conclusions as Caquot.

⁵⁰ BHS suggests changing the f. pl. form of תִּרְמָסְנָה to תִּרְמָסְנָה to (sg. energetic) because the pl. form is followed by a sg. עֲטָרַת. Irwin, p. 10, and Watts, Isaiah 1-33, p. 360 n. 3a, prefer the singular energetic form. This is possible since it only means pointing the word differently without changing it,

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

Jerusalem later in v.18. The city will be destroyed and devoured. O’Kane notes (p. 28) that in Isaiah, ‘trampling under foot’ (רמס) mostly denotes destruction (cf. 5:5; 10:6; 16:4; 26:6; 28:3, 18; 63:3)⁵¹.

V. 4 repeats the notion of destruction with the simile of the ripe fig. As the first ripe fig (פְּבֵינָה⁵²) before the summer, desirable and tempting, is eaten up quickly and ‘on site’, so the city of Samaria will be devoured suddenly and completely.

In vv. 5-6 the image of Yahweh as crown (בְּיָוֶם הַהוּא⁵³ יְהִיָּה יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת לְעֹטְרַת (צָבִי וְלְצִפְרֵית

Yahweh shall be a crown of glory for the remnant of Israel (cf. Isa 4:2) whereas the ‘tempest of destruction’ brought about by the other nations shall destroy the crown of Ephraim.

Vv. 5-6 can be seen as the key to understanding the whole of chapter 28 as the similes there emphasize the contrast between Yahweh and Ephraim.⁵⁴ Vv. 5-6 also form a link between vv. 1-4 and the following verses (7-8). There is disagreement amongst scholars as to whom the phrase וְגַם-אֵלֶּה , ‘and these also’, in v. 7 refer. It could refer back to the leaders in vv. 1-4, 6 and at the same time to the leaders of Jerusalem in v. 14,⁵⁵ or distinctly to the priests and prophets of Jerusalem and not the northerners,⁵⁶ but in any case it is clear that the verse links the prophecy of vv. 1-4 to the following one.⁵⁷ The theme of drunkenness continues with a detailed description. Repeating the words relating to drunkenness (יַיִן, ‘wine’, 2x; שֵׁכָר, ‘liquor’, 3x;

but it is also possible to take עֹטְרַת as a generic noun, singular in form but with plural meaning, ‘crown’ referring to the leading circles of the city

⁵¹ In most other occurrences of the root the meaning is the same. E.g. 2 Kgs 14:9; 2 Chron 25:18; Ps 7:6; Ezek 26:11; 34:18,19; Dan 8:7,10,13; Mic 7:10.

⁵² The word occurs in Isa 28:4; Jer 24:4; Hos 9:10; Mic 7:1. O’Kane notes that ‘the first ripe fig is always a simile or metaphor’ denoting something desirable (p. 28).

⁵³ O’Kane notes that the phrase בְּיָוֶם הַהוּא in Isa 28-33 (cf. 28:5; 29:18; 30:23) always introduces a contrast (pp. 29-30). However, Kaiser sees the phrase as no more than simply meaning ‘then’, referring to the time when the ‘tempest of destruction’ shall strike Israel (p. 241).

⁵⁴ O’Kane, p. 34, and Oswalt, pp. 508-509. Kaiser considers vv. 5-6 separately (pp. 241-242); Childs sees vv. 5-6 as the eschatological reinterpretation of vv. 1-4, possibly added later (p. 206).

⁵⁵ Miscall, Isaiah, p. 74.

⁵⁶ Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 222. Oswalt however, sees the reference to an additional rather than a distinct group (p. 509).

⁵⁷ Cf. Kaiser, p. 243; O’Kane, p. 51.

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

⁵⁸רָאָה, 'drink', 1x; פְּלִילִיָּה, 'booze', 1x; ⁵⁹שָׁגוּ, 'err', 3x; ⁶⁰תָּעוּ, 'stagger', 2x; נִבְלָעוּ, 'swallow up', 1x; פָּקַן, 'reel', 1x) of the priests and prophets, Yahweh's representatives, the poet achieves a vivid picture of their disgusting state (קִיא, 'vomit'⁶¹, צִאָה, 'filth'⁶²).

The drunkenness of the priests and prophets can be understood figuratively, as the use of the words (שָׁגוּ, תָּעוּ) also suggest it refers to their straying away from Yahweh.⁶³

Vv. 9-13 is a difficult passage and there are various interpretations.⁶⁴ O'Kane argues that the key of the theme of drunkenness and confusion is to be found in the rhetorical question of v. 9a. He writes:

The rhetorical question in v. 9a is pivotal in interpreting the theme of drunkenness and confusion; with its key verbs, יָרָה, יָדַע, בִּין, שָׁמַע, it implies that the general confusion is due to a lack of knowledge, understanding and a willingness to hear the word of Yahweh. The question raised in v. 9a is only very gradually resolved in the succeeding chapters. Even though the instruction of Yahweh is ⁵⁸ As MT points it, the word means 'a seer'. It is a hapax legomenon. Irwin takes it as a 'substantive from the root רָאָה 'drink one's fill', a by-root of יָרָה'. See his discussion, p. 18/d; also the comments of Watts, Isaiah 1-33, p. 361/7f; O'Kane, p. 41. Irwin's suggestion, followed by Watts is preferable; the parallels require some sort of drink. NJB, NIV, RSV as well as Kaiser, p. 242; Oswalt, p. 503, and Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, p. 222, translate 'vision'.

⁵⁹ The basic meaning of שָׁגוּ is 'to go astray, err'. Apart from here, it refers to drunkenness only in Prov 20:1. Elsewhere, e.g. in Job 6:24; 19:4 and Prov 5:23; 20:1; 28:10, it is associated with confusion. See also Irwin, pp. 14-15, who defends the translation 'reel' against Drivers' suggestion of translating it as 'was wrapped up in, addicted to'. Kaiser, pp. 242-245; Watts, Isaiah 1-33, pp. 359-360; Oswalt, pp. 502-503 and Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 222-223 also translate 'reel'; so also RSV. NJB has 'confused'; NIV: 'stagger'.

⁶⁰ The basic meaning of תָּעוּ is also 'stagger, wander, go astray', and it has been challenged by Driver who prefers to translate 'cackled, croaked, guffawed'. Irwin defends the translation 'staggered' (p. 15); Watts, Isaiah 1-33, p. 359; Kaiser, pp. 242-245; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 222-223 follow; so also RSV. Oswalt translates 'wander about' (pp. 502-503). NJB has 'gone astray'; NIV: 'reel'. The verb appears 50x in the OT and mostly it relates to erring in the sense of sinning. In 2 instances (Job 12:25; Isa 19:14) it refers to confusion which is likened to that of a drunk.

⁶¹ Cf. Isa 19:14; Jer 48:26, and קִיא in Prov 26:11 (noun). The verb occurs in Lev 18:25, 28; Jon 2:10; Job 20:15; Prov 23:8; 25:16; Jer 25:27.

⁶² צִאָה occurs in Isa 4:4; 28:8; 36:12; Deut 23:13; 2 Kgs 18:27; Prov 30:12; and Ezek 4:12.

⁶³ O'Kane points out that in Isa 3:12, 9:15 תָּעוּ and בִּלְעוּ occur together and used in a metaphorical sense describe the way people are led astray from Yahweh (p. 51).

⁶⁴ See for example the commentaries of Oswalt, pp. 509-513; Kaiser, pp. 242-248; Childs, pp. 206-207; Brueggemann, Isaiah 1-39, pp. 222-225.

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

beneficial and productive (28:26), it is nevertheless despised (30:9) and only in 30:20 is the role of Yahweh as teacher truly perceived. (pp. 51-52)

Vv. 14-22 contain another oracle, addressed against אַנְשֵׁי לְצֹן, ‘men of scorning’ or ‘scoffers’⁶⁵ who are taken by most commentators to be the leaders/rulers (מְשָׁלִי) of Jerusalem.⁶⁶ Vs. 14 and 22 form a frame to this section by the occurrence of the noun לְצֹן in v. 14 and the verb לִיץ (hitp .impf.) in v. 22. The scoffers are directly addressed at the beginning and end of the section emphasizing the fact that what lies between the verses, the judgement, is directed against them. They should now (לְכֵן, ‘therefore’) turn their attention from the drunkards of Ephraim to events that are to take place in Jerusalem, especially Yahweh’s actions (v. 16, 21).

The poet describes the scoffers in ironic terms, the words he puts in their mouths are in contrast with Yahweh’s words. This unfolds in a chiasmic structure in vv. 15-18:⁶⁷

Scoffers’ word: v. 15A. Covenant with Death

בְּרִית אֶת־מָוֶת

B. Safety from flood

שׁוֹטֵף כִּי־ (עָבַר) [וַעֲבַר] לֹא יִבּוֹאֵנוּ

C. Refuge in Lie

שָׁמְנוּ כָּזָב מִחֶסְנוּ וּבִשְׁקָר נִסְתָּרְנוּ

Yahweh’s word: v. 16 D. Cornerstone

יֶסֶד בְּצִיּוֹן אֶבֶן

v. 17 C’. refuge in Lie swept away by hail

וַיָּעָה בָּרֶד מִחֶסֶה כָּזָב

B’. No safety from flood

⁶⁵ So NIV, RSV, Watts, Isaiah 1-33, pp. 365-366 ; Childs, p. 207; Oswalt, p. 516; Kaiser, p. 250. NJB translates ‘insolent men’. The noun לְצֹן occurs in Prov 1:22; 29:8. Prov 21:24 defines the meaning of the word: ‘Scoffer is the name of the proud, haughty man who acts with arrogant pride.’ (RSV)

⁶⁶ So RSV; NIV; NJB; Oswalt; Childs; Kaiser (as above): ‘proverb-makers’; Watts: ‘speech-makers’; Irwin is trying to include both interpretations with his ‘reigning wits’ (p. 25). Watts, Isaiah 1-33, points out the מְשָׁלִים can be understood as coming from either of two roots, from מְשָׁל II as ‘proverb-makers’ and from מְשָׁל I as ‘rulers’ depending on which interpretation one favours (p. 366 14b). The first would suggest that the oracle was directed against priests and prophets, and the parallel with אַנְשֵׁי לְצֹן ‘scoffers’ favours this; the second that it was directed against the ruling princes. The versions seem to have taken the latter choice. It is not impossible that both meanings were intended; by ‘leaders of this people’ the poet could have referred to both political and religious leaders. See also O’Kane, pp. 59-60 on מְשָׁל.

⁶⁷ I have adapted Irwin’s, p. 26. He gives a slightly different structure [C’: Refuge in Lie swept away (v.17); A’: Covenant with Death cancelled (v.18); B’: No safety from flood.] which is not strictly chiasmic. He explains: ‘The strict chiasmic order would demand B’A’, but this order is reversed to allow further development of B’ in v.19.’

v. 18 A' Covenant with Death

The scoffers' crime is that they made a covenant with Death and Sheol, Lie and Falsehood.⁶⁸ Whether we have here another example of personification of Death and Sheol or a reference to foreign deities is debated. Commentators take their function differently. Kaiser argues that the poet employs personification to point to the scoffers' attitude. He urges caution in interpreting the passage; it should be taken only in a metaphorical sense. The scoffers were behaving as though they had made a treaty with Death and Sheol which had made them immortals.⁶⁹ According to Oswalt the passage can be interpreted in two ways: 1) literally, indicating that the leaders turned to idolatry and they 'engaged in sorcery and have entered into agreement with the gods of the underworld: Death (Mot) and Plague (Reshef).'⁷⁰ 2) The other possibility is that the poet is simply being sarcastic, by their foolish act of not trusting in Yahweh the leaders have (perhaps unknowingly) chosen death.⁷⁰

In v. 17 the justice (מִשְׁקָלָת) and righteousness (צְדָקָה), Yahweh's acts, stand in contrast to the lies and falsehood of the previous verses. In the centre of the chiasmic structure of vv. 15-18 is Yahweh's laying of the cornerstone (v. 16).⁷¹ This will be a sure foundation (מוֹסָד מוֹסָד) for the righteous. However, the wicked, who refused to listen to Yahweh, will experience sheer terror (רַק־זַעֲמָה) at hearing this message (v. 19).

Vv. 21-22 refer to former victories achieved with the help of Yahweh.⁷² His role now is reversed, he fights against his own people; זָר מַעֲשָׂהוּ 'his strange work', and נִכְרְיָה עֲבָדָתוֹ 'his alien task' refer to this reversal.

⁶⁸ Irwin sees Lie and Falsehood as names of Death and Sheol (p. 28). The parallel in v. 15 would support this.

⁶⁹ Kaiser, p. 251. Watts, Isaiah 1-33, also sees the use as metaphorical (p. 369). Death, Sheol, Lie and Falsehood are terms referring to Egypt, Judah's treaty-partner. He also mentions the possibility that these terms could refer to Osiris, the Egyptian god of the dead; he could have 'served as the divine guarantor' of the treaty with Egypt.

⁷⁰ Oswalt, pp. 516-517.

⁷¹ On the various interpretations of the 'cornerstone' see Kaiser, pp. 253-254; also Oswalt, p. 518.

⁷² For example defeating the Philistines on Mt Perazim, cf. 2 Sam 5:17ff; 1 Chron 14:8ff; battle of Gibeon, cf. Josh 10: 9ff.

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

Vv. 23-29 have the aura of instruction, indeed the section has similarities to wisdom literature.⁷³ The question remains as to who is addressed in this passage and what is the function of this segment after the condemnation of vv. 14-22?

The fact that the audience is not named here leads Kaiser to doubt that the poem was composed by Isaiah.⁷⁴ Whereas Oswalt and Watts identify the addressees with the leaders of the former section,⁷⁵ others do not see a particular audience being addressed.⁷⁶

According to Oswalt it is not certain what the function of the passage is (p. 521). It comes as 'a shock' after the quite different tone of vv. 14-22. Kaiser's opinion is similar; he points out that because of its present context, the segment must have a deeper meaning beyond the one apparent at first reading. This 'hidden sense' can be grasped only from examining the relationship of the passage to its context.⁷⁷ Oswalt presents us with several possibilities regarding the function of vv. 23-29: 1) it offers hope (similarly to chs 5 and 6); 2) it relates that 'God is not locked into merely one mode of activity. Those foolish leaders who said that the old God was inadequate for a new age did not even understand nature.' 3) It points to God as the true counsellor in contrast to the foolish leaders. Oswalt prefers the last one as this seems to fit the context best (pp. 521-522). Indeed, it emphasizes the importance of God's instructions; they are simple, make sense and bear result. Even a simple farmer who follows Yahweh's teaching/instruction gets the desired results. His labour will bear fruit, whereas the foolish leaders of the nation will only achieve destruction because they were not willing to listen to the divine instruction, instead they made their covenant with Death (v. 14).

⁷³ The opening address, הַאֲזִינוּ וּשְׁמַעוּ קוֹלִי, 'Listen and hear my voice...', is conventional in wisdom literature; cf. Job 33:1; 34:2; 37:14; Ps 49:2; Prov 4:1; 7:24. The Hiphil inv. of the verb אָזַן occurs in prophetic literature as part of the summons to listen, e.g. Jer 13:15; Hos 5:1; Joel 1:2; Isa 1:2; 10:28; 32:9. It is also found introducing the speech of an important person, e.g. Gen 4:23 (Lamech); Num 23:18 (Balaam); Deut 32:1 (Moses); Judg 5:3 (Deborah).

⁷⁴ Kaiser, p. 259.

⁷⁵ Oswalt, pp. 522-524; Watts, Isaiah 1-33, p. 375.

⁷⁶ E. g. O'Kane, p. 99.

⁷⁷ Kaiser, pp. 58-259.

6.6 Conclusion of qeteb

From the discussion above we can conclude that there is no one particular word to translate qeteb. The contexts suggest some kind of destructive force that comes from Yahweh as a punishment. Therefore the general ‘destruction’ or ‘scourge’ have been used here as these best express what it refers to.

De Moor wrote that ‘On the sole basis of the Masoretic text of these passages it cannot be decided whether qtb was a demon or not.’⁷⁸ However, he and some other scholars appeal to the LXX, Midrashic and ancient Near Eastern material in order to prove otherwise.⁷⁹ However, we have seen that the ancient Near Eastern material is scant and questionable. The ancient versions cannot be relied on. They are not consistent in their interpretation of the word. For example in Ps 91 both LXX and Vg do not know what to do with qeteb (Vg: ab incurso, LXX: συμπτωματος), יְשׁוּרֵי צַהֲרָיִם is taken as referring to a ‘noonday demon’ (et daemonio meridiano, και δαιμονιου μεσημβρινου) and not qeteb. De Moor thinks that ‘the Septuagint presupposes a different Hebrew text in Ps 91:6.’⁸⁰ We have seen a similar problem in Deuteronomy 32 too.⁸¹ In Hosea 13 LXX has κεντρον, Vg morsus, meaning ‘sting’ or ‘biting’. In Isaiah 28:2 it is not clear how LXX interpreted qeteb, Vg has the sense of destruction and Targ (presumably storm-) ‘wind’. Although undoubtedly these can be valuable in tracing the development of the term there is no need to bring in outside evidence to illuminate its function in the Hebrew Bible. That becomes clear from the careful examination of all of its occurrences.

In Ps 91 qeteb occurs in the company of Deber, the Fowler, the Arrow and Terror, all destructive forces, angels of Yahweh, sent to punish or protect according to Yahweh’s plan. In Hosea 13 Qeteb appears together with Deber, Mot and Sheol, bringing destruction as instruments of Yahweh. The destruction depends on Yahweh’s decision, so all four of them are inferior to Yahweh and are ultimately his agents.

Psalm 78 suggested a possible interpretation for Deber as one of the מְלֹאכְיֵי רָעִים, the Angels of Evil; according to Psalm 91 Qeteb and Deber are both angels of ⁷⁸ ‘O Death...’, p. 100.

⁷⁹ See above 2.5.

⁸⁰ ‘O Death...’, p. 100.

⁸¹ See n. 20 p. 201 above.

J. Blair 6. Qeteb

Yahweh. Deuteronomy 32 supports this interpretation of Qeteb and extends it to Reshef. Yahweh sends his Evils (short for his angels of evil), his Arrows, seven of them this time (Famine, Plague, Bitter Scourge, Fang of Wild Animals, Poison of Snakes, Sword and Terror), at others their number varies. There are five in Ps 91, four in Hosea 13, and three in Isaiah 28. Here, although neither Deber nor Reshef appears with Qeteb there are other agents beside him: Barad (Hail) and Mighty Waters. These agents of Yahweh function as forces of destruction, which come from Yahweh as a punishment for turning away from him and turning to other gods.

We can conclude that in all four passages Qeteb appears in a personified sense. However, there is nothing to support a demonological interpretation in any of the passages.⁸² Qeteb appears as an agent of Yahweh, possibly one of his angels of evil. Furthermore, as in the case of deber, there is no evidence to suggest that qeteb was the name of one particular angel of Yahweh. Any of Yahweh's angels could be a qeteb, a 'scourge', a 'bringer of destruction'. There is no evidence that a mythological figure would lie behind the qeteb of the texts in the Hebrew Bible.

⁸² Contra Caquot, Wyatt, Gaster, Tromp, etc. cf. 2.5.

CHAPTER 7: RESHEF IN THE HEBREW BIBLE

7.1 Introduction

There are seven occurrences of רֶשֶׁף in the Hebrew Bible. These are: 1 Chron 7:25; Deut 32: 24; Hab 3:5; Ps 78:48; Ps 76:4; Job 5:7; and Cant 8:6. It appears to be a personal name of uncertain etymology.¹ Indeed in 1 Chron 7:25 Reshef is a proper noun, the name of one of Ephraim's descendants.² Chapter 2 has shown that the other six occurrences are generally taken to be references to the West Semitic deity Reshef, and because of this deity's association with plague in the ancient Near East, the term in the Old Testament is regarded either as a 'demon' or as appearing completely demythologised.³ However, it was also shown that there is nothing in the ancient Near Eastern evidence that would point to Reshef being regarded as a demon, or as an 'evil' deity. His association with plague and disease was only one of his aspects, the major characteristic being that of a god of war and protector of kings.⁴ Thus before any conclusions are drawn regarding the term in the Hebrew Bible it is necessary to examine all the texts in which it occurs.

Therefore this chapter takes a close look at the Old Testament passages where reshef occurs with the aim to determine the meaning of the term, whether it is the name of a 'demon' and if there is a mythological figure behind it.

7.2 Deuteronomy 32

In our discussion of Deut 32: 23-25 we have argued that Reshef was one of Yahweh's Evils and Arrows that he unleashes to punish Israel. The others were Famine, רָעָב, Bitter Scourge, קֶטֶב מְרִירִי, Fang of Wild Animals, שֵׁן-בְּהֵמוֹת, Poison of Snakes, חֶמֶת זַחְלֵי עֶפְרַיִם, Sword, חֶרֶב, and Terror, אִימָה. We have also argued that these forces are best regarded as personified and as Yahweh's angels, the מַלְאָכֵי רָעִים of Ps 78.⁵

¹ HALOT, p. 1297.

² HALOT, p. 1298.

³ See 2.6.5. The meaning of the Hebrew term is usually given as 'plague' or 'pestilence'.

⁴ See summary in 2.6.6.

⁵ For Deut 32 see 6.4.

7.3 Habbakkuk 3

In Hab 3:5 we have a description of a mighty and awe-inspiring Yahweh whose power is destruction. He is described as a thunder-god and a king with his attendants, Reshef and Deber around him. Both Reshef and Deber appear here as secondary divine beings, members of Yahweh’s retinue. In fact, in light of the previous discussion they can be regarded as two of Yahweh’s angels.⁶

7.4 Psalm 78:48

As we have seen above some commentators take בָּרָד in Psalm 78:48 to be referring to the fifth plague in Exodus 9:3. However, on closer examination we have found that it is better to take בָּרָד as personified and we suggested identifying it with one of the מַלְאֲכֵי יְרֵעִים.⁷

On the other hand it is possible that we do have a reference to the fifth ‘plague’ in v. 48. In vv. 44-51 with a series of parallel images the poet recounts (quite liberally and not in exact detail) the ‘plagues of Egypt’ in order to remind the people of what Yahweh had done for them. Vv. 44-48 recount the turning of the water to blood, sending of the horseflies, frogs, caterpillars, locusts, בָּרָד and בָּרָד־רְשָׁפִים is usually translated as ‘hail’ and רְשָׁפִים here as ‘bolts of lightning’⁸ to keep the parallelism.

v. 44	Turned	rivers to blood // from streams could not drink
	וַיַּהֲפֹךְ	לְדָם יְאֹרֵיהֶם // וְנִזְלִיהֶם בְּלִישְׁתֵּינֹן
v. 45	Sent	flies that devoured // frogs that devastated
	וַיִּשְׁלַח	עָרָב // וַצְּפַרְדֵּי
v. 46	Gave	crops to grasshopper // produce to locust
	וַיִּתֵּן	לְחֹסִיל // לְאַרְבֶּה
v. 47	Destroyed	vines by hail // sycamore figs by sleet
	וַיַּהֲרֹג	בְּבָרָד // בַּחֲנָמַל
v. 48	Gave over	cattle to barad // livestock to reshafim
	וַיִּסְגֵּר	לְבָרָד // לְרְשָׁפִים

⁶ For Hab 3 see 5.2.3.

⁷ For Ps 78 see 5.5.10.

⁸ NIV, KJV, RSV and NJB have ‘thunderbolts’, LXX: ‘fire’.

The suggestion to change בַּרְדַּ to יְבֵר here makes sense;⁹ the parallelism is kept and it culminates in the disease/plagues pair. Thus v. 48 would read:

He gave over to deber their cattle, and their livestock to the reshafim. Or
He gave over to disease their cattle and their livestock to the plagues.

Caquot and Fulco are both proponents of changing the reading of בַּרְדַּ to יְבֵר in v. 48. For Caquot not only is the occurrence of ‘hail’ in v.48 ‘surprising’, but a change would restore the pair Deber – Reshef of Hab 3:5 in this passage too. He regards them both as ‘demons’, but he goes further and suggests that perhaps Barad is a ‘demon’ too.¹⁰ Fulco does not support this latter proposition but agrees with the former one. For him Deber and Reshefs are ‘malevolent spirits accompanying God in his destructive wake’ (p. 59).

In fact we have two possibilities here. Firstly, if we take יְבֵר and רְשָׁפִים as common nouns, deber would mean the disease that smote the cattle in Egypt and reshafim would refer to the destruction in general, the various kinds of ‘plagues’ that are listed in the verses above. Secondly, the following verses however, indicate that they should be regarded as personified and as members of the Angels of Evil. In this case the devastation in vv. 44-48 can be regarded as their work. They are Yahweh’s agents of punishment causing destruction on his command, but there is nothing to suggest that they would be ‘malevolent spirits’.

7.5 Psalm 76:4

v. 4

שְׁמֹה שִׁבְרֵי רְשָׁפִים קִשְׁתֵּי מִגֵּן וְחֶרֶב וּמִלְחָמָה סִלָּה:

The psalm can be divided as follows:

V.1:	Title
Vv. 2-4:	Of the greatness of Elohim
v. 2	His name is known
v. 3	His dwelling-place is known
v. 4	His might is known

⁹ Cf. BHS crit. app.; Caquot, ‘Quelques’, pp. 61-62; Fulco, p.59.

¹⁰ ‘Quelques’, p. 61.

Vv. 5-11: Addressing Elohim with praise

v. 5 Elohim is majestic

Vv. 6-7 His power and might shown in the extent of his destruction

vv. 8-11 God's anger, judgement results in people's fear and praise

Vv. 12-13: Call to worship God (the One to be feared)

v.12 calling people to make vows and bring gifts

v.13 affirming God's power: he is to be feared indeed

Some commentators argue that this is a historic psalm, i.e. it was composed after a specific event.¹¹ Thematically it is related to Ps 46 and 48.¹²

Verse 1 identifies the psalm as one of the Asaph psalms.¹³

Vv. 2-4 are a song of praise of God (אֱלֹהִים). The poet talks of God in the 3rd person and in general terms, his name and place of presence are known in the whole of Israel.

v. 2a	Elohim is known in Judah	נוֹדַע בֵּית הַנֹּדֶה אֱלֹהִים
v. 2b	his name great in Israel	בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל גָּדוֹל שְׁמוֹ
v. 3a	his tent ¹⁴ is in Salem	בְּשָׁלֵם סִבּוֹ

¹¹ This seems to be supported by LXX which adds 'a song for the Assyrian' and thus cf. 2 Kgs 19; Isa 37; also by Hossfeld and Zenger, Psalms 2, p. 263. A reflection of the Davidic era (cf. A. Weiser, The Psalms: A Commentary, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1971), p. 526), as well as a possible victory in Maccabean times (A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms (London: Marshall, Morgan and Scott, 1972), II, p. 551) were also suggested. More likely, as Anderson (p. 551) and Tate also point out, the psalm reflects the whole 'salvation-history' of Israel and not one specific event (p. 263).

¹² On the similarities as well as differences see the detailed analysis of Hossfeld and Zenger, Psalms 2, pp. 261-262.

¹³ A 'song', cf. Pss 18; 45-46; 48; 65-68; 75-76; 83; 87-88; 92; 108. Hossfeld and Zenger point out that of the 12 Asaf psalms only Pss 75, 76 and 83 are 'songs' (Psalms 2, p. 264).

¹⁴ Dahood, Psalms II, p. 218; Tate, p. 261 and Hossfeld & Zenger, Psalms 2: 'his covert/lair'. They argue that סִבּוֹ and מַעוֹן / מַעֲנָה often appear together designating the lion's lair (cf. Job 38:40; Jer 25:38; Ps 10:9; for סִבּוֹ; Am 3:4; Nah 2:13; Ps 104:22 for מַעֲנָה / מַעוֹן as the lion's den; Jer 8:10; 10:22; 49:33; 51:37 as the jackals' den) and thus they argue that 'The psalm ... begins with the grating metaphor of YHWH, who has established on Zion his "dwelling" as a "camping place" ... in order to lurk there, as a watching lion, awaiting the wicked – and this very metaphor is then further developed in the course of the psalm. From that point of view the two nouns סִבּוֹ and מַעֲנָה must be translated accordingly, not with "tabernacle/tent" and "abode/dwelling place", but with "hiding place" and "camp".' (pp. 260 and 264-266) In fact, of the examples given only in Job 38:40 do the two words appear together. In all the other examples the lion/jackal is specifically mentioned thus the designation of the words as 'lair/den' is obvious. However in the present psalm there is nothing to suggest that Yahweh as a lion is meant; it is Yahweh the warrior who is the focus of the praise. The context supports the 'tent' / 'dwelling-place' translation.

v. 3b his dwelling in Zion

וּמַעֲוֹנָתוֹ בְּצִיּוֹן

V. 4 continues Yahweh's praise turning now to his deeds that reflect a mighty warrior.

v. 4a there he broke the reshefs-of-the bow שָׁמָּה שָׁבַר רֶשֶׁפֵי־קִשְׁתָּהּ

v. 4b the shields and swords and the battle

מִגָּן
וְחֶרֶב
וּמִלְחָמָה

The שָׁמָּה רֶשֶׁפֵי־קִשְׁתָּהּ here is unique and difficult. The versions did not know what to do with it and are thus rather vague in their translations.¹⁵

It is usually taken as referring to arrows and is thus rendered accordingly.¹⁶ The Bible versions give 'flashing arrows',¹⁷ or 'lightning flashes of the bow',¹⁸ and the commentators usually follow, some with more liberal translations. Thus Dahood has 'with his thunderbolts he shattered the bow',¹⁹ similarly Weiser, 'the lightnings of the bow'.²⁰ Although he recognized the mythological dimension of the expression, his translation does not mirror this. Following NIV and RSV, A. Anderson also translates 'flashing arrows' though notes that literally it means 'the flames of the bow', taking thus רֶשֶׁף as meaning 'flames'. Similarly to Weiser, he sees the origins of the metaphor in mythology, i.e. the arrows are the lightnings of the storm god.²¹ Caquot thinks that the 'mythological colouration' of the term in itself is not enough to justify the 'lightning' interpretation. He argues that one must know whether the psalm refers to Yahweh's supernatural enemies or historical ones. In the latter case the expression 'would have to mean arrows, the sword and the spear (in a) purely material (sense)'.²² Caquot himself prefers to translate the expression as 'les traits de ¹⁵ LXX has τα κρατη, 'the power' of the bow; similarly Vg has potentias; P 'the arms of the bow'.

¹⁶ Thus HALOT, p. 1298: 'רֶשֶׁפֵי־קִשְׁתָּהּ flames (or lightning flashes) from the bow, meaning arrows.'

¹⁷ CJB, NIV and RSV; KJV has 'arrows of the bow' and JPS: 'fiery shafts'.

¹⁸ NJB.

¹⁹ Psalms II, p. 217. He takes רֶשֶׁף as 'an accusative of means', the suffix being that of 'the third person masculine singular following a plural substantive'.

²⁰ Pp. 524 and 527. He writes: 'In a poetical metaphor the poet speaks of arrows as "lightnings of the bow"; this image probably originated in a mythological conception according to which the lightnings were regarded as the arrows of the god who appeared in the storm-clouds.'

²¹ Psalms, p. 552.

²² 'Quelques', p. 62.

l'arc'. Following Anderson, Tate also takes רִשְׁפֵי־קֶשֶׁת as 'flames'; רִשְׁפֵי־קֶשֶׁת for him being 'a poetic reference either to the swiftness of the arrows or to incendiary arrows - probably the latter' (p. 261). Thus he translates the expression as 'the fiery arrow'. More recently Hossfeld and Zenger also translated 'the flashes of the bow' taking it to refer to the 'burning arrows'.²³ Xella translates the expression רִשְׁפֵי־קֶשֶׁת literally as 'the Reshefs of the bow' and relates it to 'the imagery of the god armed with bow and arrows' (p. 703).

Similarly to the ancient versions, modern commentators do not really know what to do with this expression. Some recognize that there is an underlying mythological element. However, they take this to be a reference to Reshef, the god of lightning or thunder. Such interpretation is possible but would not be consistent with the meaning of רִשְׁפֵי in other passages which is that of destruction ('plague') of war.²⁴ The context here is that of a battle and destruction (the words 'sword', 'shield', 'bow' occur in such context). The similarity of this verse to v. 10 of Ps 46 is striking. There too Yahweh breaks (מִשְׁבִּית) the bow (קֶשֶׁת), shatters the spear (וּקִצֵּי חַנִּית), and burns the shields with fire (עֲנָלוֹת יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאֵשׁ). The word 'bow', קֶשֶׁת, frequently occurs with 'sword',²⁵ 'shield' (מִגֶּן),²⁶ 'spear' (כִּידוֹן)²⁷ or 'arrow' (חֵץ).²⁸ The expression 'breaking of the bow' occurs in several passages, e.g. Jer 49:35;²⁹ Hos 1:5;³⁰ Zec 9:10;³¹ (Zec 9:13 bending the bow), all related to war. In some instances we find the (battle) bow personified, as for example in Zec 10:4. There the Bow of Battle (קֶשֶׁת מִלְחָמָה), the Cornerstone (פִּנֵּה), and the Tent-peg (יָתֵד) are clearly in parallel with the 'every ruler' (כָּל־נוֹגֵשׁ). In Job 20:24 the 'Bow of Bronze' (קֶשֶׁת נְחוּשֶׁת) will cut through the one who flees, and in Job 41: 20 the Son of the Bow (בֶּן־קֶשֶׁת) cannot make one flee.

²³ Psalms 2, pp. 259 and 265. They do not comment on רִשְׁפֵי־קֶשֶׁת.

²⁴ See discussion of reshef in the other passages.

²⁵ E.g. Isa 21:15.

²⁶ E.g. Jer 46:9; 2 Chron 17:17.

²⁷ E.g. Jer 6:23.

²⁸ E.g. Jer 50:14.

²⁹ Yahweh shall break the 'bow of Elam' (שִׁבַּר אֶת־קֶשֶׁת עֵילָם).

³⁰ Yahweh shall break the 'bow of Israel' (וּשְׁבַרְתִּי אֶת־קֶשֶׁת יִשְׂרָאֵל).

³¹ The battle bow will be broken (וּנְכַרְתָּהּ קֶשֶׁת מִלְחָמָה).

I suggest that Bow here is used in parallel with Battle, Sword and Shield as aspects of the Battle. רִשְׁפֵי־קֶשֶׁת, the Plagues-of-the-Bow represent the destruction that follows war. The poet personified them in order to represent both the superhuman and human enemies that threaten Yahweh's people. However, we have seen that these can also be agents that Yahweh uses in order to punish those who deserve it. It is not clear what role they have here, whether they are enemies of God's people or are agents of punishment. Both are possible. Perhaps the poet was purposefully ambiguous.

This double meaning runs through vv. 5-11. The poet addresses God directly and praises him; his majesty and might (v. 5) are shown in the extent of the destruction he causes (v. 6). Yahweh's anger (v. 8) and judgement (v. 9 and 10) can be directed against his people as well as against his people's enemies. The merismus heaven-earth (מִשָּׁמַיִם... אֶרֶץ) in v. 9 encompasses everyone. The poet asks (v. 8):

וּמִי־יַעֲמֹד לְפָנֶיךָ מְאַז אַפְּךָ, 'who can stand before you when you are angry?'

The result of God's wrath is that everyone fears (vv. 9, 13) and praises him (vv. 11, 12).

God's judgement however also saves (v. 10); he delivers (לְהוֹשִׁיעַ) all the afflicted³² of the earth (כָּל־עַגְוֵי־אֶרֶץ). We have seen it elsewhere too³³ that God judges, punishes but also saves and delivers those who put their faith in him. In Hosea 2:18(20) God declares:

In that day I will make a covenant for them
With the beasts of the field and the birds of the air
And the creatures that move along the ground.
Bow and sword and battle
I will abolish from the land,
So that all may lie down in safety. (NIV)

The connection of the second half of this verse with v. 4 of Ps 76 is striking. 'Abolishing' the bow, sword and battle is the same as breaking them. In fact the same Hebrew word שָׁבַר is used in the Hosea passage as in the Psalm.³⁴ Perhaps the ³² Cf. Isa 49:13; Ps 9:12; 10:17; 22:24; 72: 4; etc.

³³ See for example the Jeremiah and Ezekiel passages in 5.3 and 5.4.

³⁴ אֶשְׁבֹּר in Hos 2:20 and שָׁבַר in Ps 76:4.

idea of making a covenant with the once threatening forces as in the Hosea passage also underlies the saving of the afflicted in the psalm.

Therefore in v. 12 the poet emphatically calls his audience (with a Qal and Piel imperative, as well as a Hiphil verb) to make vows (נָדַרְוּ),³⁵ and fulfil them (וְשָׁלְמוּ), to bring offerings (יֹבִילוּ שֵׁי) to God (לְמוֹרָא // אֱלֹהֵיכֶם); emphasizing his power for the last time:

v. 13a	he cuts off the spirit of rulers	יִבְצֹר רוּחַ נְגִידִים
v. 13b	he is feared by the kings of the earth	נוֹרָא לְמַלְכֵי-אָרֶץ

From the discussion above we have seen that in this passage Reshef appears personified together with other instruments of war, Bow, Battle, Sword and Shield. We suggested translating רִשְׁפֵי-קֶשֶׁת as Plagues-of -the-Bow, meaning the destruction that is connected or follows a battle, that being destruction in general or the outbreak of infectious diseases that was common after war. The word ‘plague’ has the advantage of carrying both of these possibilities, especially if there is a mythological figure underlying the word reshef here. If such was the case, Reshef, in his aspect of war and plague god, would come into mind.

7.6 Job 5:7

v. 7

כִּי-אָדָם לְעֵמֶל יוֹלֵד וּבְנֵי-רֶשֶׁף יִגְבִּיהוּ עוֹף:

The passage can be divided as follows:

Vv. 1-7: There is no help from anyone; one’s own foolishness is the cause of one’s troubles

v.1: which Holy One (מִקְדָּשִׁים) could help Job?

vv. 2-5: consequences of foolishness (אֲוִיל)

vv. 6-7: Eliphaz’s judgement: Job’s troubles must have had a cause

vv. 8 -16: God helps; description of his saving acts

vv. 17 -26: God protects;

v. 27: all this is true

³⁵ Cf. Judg. 11:39; 2 Sam 15: 7, 8; Jer 44: 25; Jon 1:16. Tate notes that the underlying idea might be of vows having been made in times of danger (p. 265).

Chapter 5 is a continuation of ch. 4; both containing Eliphaz' speech to Job.³⁶ Eliphaz' response to Job's cry for deliverance at first glance seems a strange comfort to a sufferer. There is no one to help him; he can cry out in vain there is no one to answer him. Which Holy One will he turn to? (v. 1)³⁷ Some scholars believe that קדושים is an epithet of God and thus the meaning of the phrase would be, who else rather than the Holy One could Job turn to?³⁸ However, it is more likely that קדושים refers to Yahweh's angels (מלאכים), his servants (עבדיו) of whom ch 4 v. 18 speaks.³⁹ Perhaps Eliphaz is implying that turning to them (or one of them) would constitute an act of foolishness as they are unable to help Job. (Help can only come from God as we shall see later in the next two sections.) The preposition כִּי at the beginning of v. 2 can be seen to support this.⁴⁰

כִּי-לְאַוִּיל יִהְרַג-כָּעֵשׂ וּפְתָה תָמִית קִנְאָה:

For anger destroys the fool and jealousy kills the foolish.

The verse is well balanced; every verb, subject and object has its parallel:

(vb.) ⁴¹	destroys // kills	תָּמִית // יִהְרַג
(subj.)	anger // jealousy	קִנְאָה // כָּעֵשׂ
(obj.)	fool // foolish	וּפְתָה // לְאַוִּיל

The two words, אַוִּיל and פְּתָה used for the 'fool' in parallelism⁴² as objects are placed first, probably for emphasis.⁴³

³⁶ For a structural analysis of chs 4-5 see e.g. D. J. A. Clines, Job 1-20, WBC 17 (Dallas: Word Books, 1989), pp. 119-120.

³⁷ E. Dhorme, A Commentary on the Book of Job, transl. by H. H. Rowley (London: Thomas Nelson, 1967) places v. 1 after v. 7 and v. 2 after 4:21 (p. 57).

³⁸ R. Gordis, The Book of Job: Commentary, New Translation and Special Studies (New York: Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1978), pp. 51-52.

³⁹ Cf. Hos 11: 12 (12: 1); Zech 14: 5; Dan 4:10, 14, 20; 8:13; Ps 89:7(8). So also M. H. Pope, Job: Introduction, Translation and Notes, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1973), p. 41/ Notes.

⁴⁰ Some take כִּי to be an emphatic particle, 'surely'. E.g. J. E. Hartley, The Book of Job (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988), p. 115 n. 2; J. C. L. Gibson, Job (Edinburgh: St Andrew Press, 1985), p. 43; Gordis, Job, p. 52.

⁴¹ P renders the two verbs by the same one, 'kill' (Dhorme, p. 57).

⁴² פְּתָה is the participle of the verb and not the adjective, and its meaning is determined by the parallel term אַוִּיל. P renders both terms by the same noun, 'madman' (Dhorme, p. 57).

⁴³ Gordis, Job, p. 52; Hartley, Job, p. 115.

Many scholars regard this verse as an ancient proverb with the ‘foolish’ referring to the ‘wicked’ in general.⁴⁴ However, it is also possible that Eliphaz had Job in mind if he considered turning for help to others rather than Yahweh. Vv. 2-5 list the consequences of such foolishness.

- | | | |
|------|---|------------------------------|
| v. 3 | his house cursed | וְאָקוּב (קבב) ⁴⁵ |
| v. 4 | his children destroyed – i.e. crushed to dust | וַיִּדְכְּאוּ ⁴⁶ |
| | far from deliverance | יִרְחֲקוּ מִיִּשׁוּעַ |
| | no one to save/deliver them | וְאִין מְצִיל |
| v. 5 | his harvest the hungry devour | קָצִירוֹ רָעִב יֹאכְלֵהוּ |

A literal translation of v. 5 is very difficult, and there are various attempts.⁴⁷

Vv. 6-7 do not testify of Eliphaz’ compassion. He believes that all trouble and hardship must have a cause, they do not appear out of nowhere. The parallel terms of this well-balanced verse emphasize Eliphaz’ meaning:

- | | | | | | | |
|-------|----------|-------|-------------------|-------------|-------------|-----------|
| v. 6a | trouble | אָנֹן | did not come out | לֹא-יֵצֵא | from dust | מִזֶּפֶר |
| v. 6b | hardship | עָמַל | did not spring up | לֹא-יִצְמַח | from ground | מֵאֶרְצָה |

Eliphaz seems to be implying that the cause of suffering lies ultimately in the person who suffers; it is man, i.e. Job himself that is the cause of his own trials and tribulations.

- | | | |
|-------|---|------------------------------------|
| v. 7a | man is born to trouble | כִּי-אָדָם לְעָמַל יוֹלָד |
| v. 7b | and the sons of reshef are flying high | וּבְנֵי-רֶשֶׁף יִגְבִּיהוּ עֵינָהּ |

This verse, and particularly the phrase ‘the sons of reshef’, is one of the most disputed of Job 5. To some it is an allusion to some flying ‘demons’, and to others ⁴⁴ N. Whybray, Job (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1998), p. 45; Hartley, Job, p.117/2; Gordis, Job, p. 52; Pope, Job, p. 42 cf. Prov. 14:30.

⁴⁵ MT has Eliphaz doing the cursing which makes the verse difficult to translate. Some scholars suggest emending the text (cf. LXX taking the verb as passive, ‘their habitation was devoured’) and reading the verb as passive. E.g. Pope, Job, p. 40; so also NIV: ‘was cursed’; NJB: ‘a curse fell’. Gordis, Job, suggests taking וְאָקוּב in a declarative sense and thus: ‘I declared cursed’ (p. 52). This suggestion is followed by Hartley, Job, p. 115. Clines, p. 107 (and notes on p. 114f.) RSV and KJV translate with MT ‘I cursed’. MT is preferred because of the parallelism in the verse: וְאָקוּב // רָאִיתִי both 1st sg. verbs. The emphasis is not on who is doing the cursing but on the fact that the foolish person’s house is cursed as a result of his foolishness.

⁴⁶ Cf. Ps 90:3.

⁴⁷ See discussions in Dhorme, pp. 59-60. He inserts 4: 21a between 5:b and c. See also Pope, Job, p. 42; Gordis, Job, p. 53-54; Clines, pp. 115-116 and 122-123.

simply an ancient saying that has lost its meaning. To Caquot it is both. He regards the בְּנֵי־רָשָׁף as ‘winged demons inhabiting the space between sky and earth’. He argues that MT thus makes perfect sense; a human being’s suffering does not come from earth but from the demons above.⁴⁸ Further, Caquot argues that the author of Job here made use of a proverbial saying in which a mythological image had crystallized. This expression would have had meaning to the author but by the time of the later translators its meaning was lost. They did not know who the בְּנֵי־רָשָׁף were and translated it as ‘birds’ probably to fit in with the following verb. This is unlikely. It is clear that the versions have found it difficult to render בְּנֵי־רָשָׁף because of its mythological character and thus had altered the expression deliberately, interpreting it variously.⁴⁹

Modern scholars also differ in their understanding of this verse. Thus Dhorme suggests pointing יִלְדֵּד as יִלְדֵּד making the verb Hiphil, and thus allowing him to translate v. 7a as ‘it is man who engenders trouble’. He then identifies בְּנֵי־רָשָׁף as the sons of lightning, i.e. the eagle.⁵⁰ Similarly to Dhorme, Gordis also reads the Hiphil form of the verb יִלְדֵּד, thus making man responsible for ‘producing’ trouble. The בְּנֵי־רָשָׁף for him could be referring either to ‘the sparks of lightning’ or to the West Semitic deity Reshef, and thus referring to the ‘shafts of the pestilence.’ He seems to prefer the first, as he translates the expression, ‘the sparks fly upwards’.⁵¹

While Pope and Hartley, although seeing a mythological reference to the god Reshef in the בְּנֵי־רָשָׁף, are still undecided, Clines and Whybray definitely think that Reshef in his role as god of pestilence is referred to in v. 7b, and so translate it accordingly.⁵² Clines and Whybray are right in taking רָשָׁף in its meaning of ‘plague’/‘pestilence’ or ‘destruction’ (cf. Deut. 32:24; Hab 3:5). This is supported by the occurrence in the

⁴⁸ He writes: ‘...l’homme est né pour souffrir et le malheur vient, non pas de la terre (v. 6), mais des demons qui volent dans le ciel hors de l’atteinte des homes qu’ils accablent.’ (‘Quelques’, p. 60)

⁴⁹ As Dhorme points out 1st Targ reads ‘sons of the demons’ (p. 61). The other versions interpret it variously. 2nd Targ has ‘the sparks which shoot from coals of fire’; Greek versions, P and Vg see the name of a bird.

⁵⁰ Job, pp. 61-62.

⁵¹ Job, pp. 44, 55. So also Gibson without commenting on the ‘sons of reshef’ (pp. 44-48).

⁵² Pope, Job, although giving ‘Reshef’s sons’ as his translation, also thinks rendering the expression as ‘flames’ make sense (pp. 42-43). Hartley (Job, p. 116 n. 12 and p. 119) keeps his options open; he prefers ‘sparks’ but if the mythological interpretation is accepted he thinks that ‘the “sons of Resheph” would be “the plagues” that ascend from the lower world to curse human beings (cf. Deut. 32:24; Hab. 3:5).’ Clines has ‘sons of Pestilence’ (p. 107); and Whybray ‘sons of rešep’ (p. 46).

next section (vv. 17- 26) of the ‘sword’, ‘famine’, ‘wild animals’, ‘six/seven calamities’, etc., words that frequently appear together with words referring to destruction. However, they both fail to see the mythological reference as a poetic device and thus impose a demonological interpretation. Hartley sees the ‘sons of Reshef’ as ‘underworld demons of pestilence’, and Whybray as ‘demonic figures associated with’ Reshef.⁵³ In fact there is no basis for seeing the בְּנֵי־רֶשֶׁף as ‘demons’.

The connection of v. 6b and 7 is made clear by the repetition of עָמַל and the play on the words אָדָמָה and אָדָם, and if we accept the re-pointing of the verb יִלְדֵּד to read the Hiphil יִלְדֵּד (as suggested by BHS crit. app. and most scholars), the antithesis also becomes apparent, and Eliphaz’ meaning emphasised. Trouble did not spring from earth, for it is man who ‘begets’ (i.e. causes) trouble. As in many other cases, whenever the Israelites turned away from Yahweh and turned to other gods they brought his punishment down upon themselves. Here too, Eliphaz might be implying that if Job is seeking help from other ‘Holy Ones’ rather than Yahweh, he would be bringing trouble, i.e. punishment down on himself. Yahweh’s punishment was always total destruction carried out by his agents/ angels (his ‘Holy Ones’) in various forms. His Scourges could be the Sword, Famine, Wild Animals, Plague/Pestilence, etc.

As in Hos 13:14 Deber and Qeteb appeared along with Mot and Sheol as instruments of the agents of Yahweh, carrying out punishment on His behalf, so here too, we suggest that we should regard the sons of Reshef as well as Reshef, as agents of Yahweh. His/their function is to bring destruction (‘plague’) as a punishment from Yahweh.

The above suggestion finds support in the following sections of ch. 5.

In v. 8 Eliphaz makes it clear that the right way is to turn to Yahweh for help as he himself does.

אֵלֹהִים אֲנִי אֶדְרֹשׁ אֶל־אֵל וְאֶל־אֱלֹהִים אֲשִׁים דְּבַרְתִּי:

But as for me, I appeal to El, and to Elohim I submit my cause.

⁵³ Hartley, Job, p.142; Whybray, p. 46. So also Xella, p. 703 and Caquot, ‘Quelques’, pp. 59-62.

The assonance makes v. 8 really very striking. All but the last of nine words begin with an aleph. The play on the names of God אֱלֹהִים; אֱלֹהִים; אֱלֹהִים is lost in the translations.

Vv. 9-16 present a conventional doxology. This hymn of praise recounts Yahweh's deeds using the poetical device of parallelism.

The faithful should put their trust in him because:

v. 9a	He makes great things //	עָשָׂה גְדֹלוֹת
v. 9b	and wonderful (things); ⁵⁴	נִפְלְאוֹת
v. 10a	he gives rain on (the face of) the earth //	הֵגִתָּן מָטָר עַל-פְּנֵי-אָרֶץ
v. 10b	sends water (on the face of) the open places; ⁵⁵	וְשִׁלַּח מַיִם עַל-פְּנֵי חוּצוֹת
v. 11a	he raises the lowly //	לְשׁוֹם שְׁפָלִים לְמָרוֹם
v. 11b	and lifts the bereaved; ⁵⁶	וְקָדְרִים שָׁבְבוּ יֵשַׁע
v. 12	he breaks the plots of the crafty; ⁵⁷ //	מִפֶּה מַחְשְׁבוֹת עֲרוּמִים
v. 13	he ensnares the cunning;	לִכְדַּר חֲכָמִים
v. 15a	he saves from the sword ⁵⁸ //	וַיִּשַׁע מִחֶרֶב
v. 15b	and from the hand of the mighty;	וּמִיַּד חֲזָק

It is not clear whether Eliphaz recounts God's acts because he is trying to comfort Job or is perhaps reminding him that Yahweh can reverse his fate (cf. Ps 91).⁵⁹

⁵⁴ Cf. Job 9:10; 37:5; Pss 71:19; 136:4; 145: 6; Deut 10:21, Qoh 43:32; etc. Yahweh's wonders are linked with the exodus in Pss 78:4; 106:22; with other historical acts in Pss 105:5; 106:7; with his creation in Pss 107:24; 135:4. See also Dhorme, p. 63.

⁵⁵ Gordis, Job, notes that rain was considered a 'wonder' in the ANE cf. Jer 10: 13-16 (p. 56); and Clines that its 'transforming power' was significant (pp. 144-145). Cf. Job 36:27ff.; 38:25ff.; Pss 104:11; 147:8; Eccl. 43:22. See also Dhorme, pp. 63-64.

⁵⁶ Cf. Job 22:29; 36:7b; 1 Sam 2:8; Ps 18:28; 75:8; 113:7-8; 147: 6. Gordis, Job, notes that קָדְרִים does not refer to the mourning ones here (as e.g. Jer 8:21; Ps 35:14) but rather it means 'afflicted, miserable, poverty-stricken' cf. Prov. 22:29; Ps 10:8, 14 and Targ (p. 56). For Targum and other versions of this verse see Dhorme, p. 64.

⁵⁷ Gordis, Job, notes that עֲרוּמִים has a positive meaning ('prudence') in Prov 1:4; 8:5,12; it can also be used in the sense of 'cunning, crafty' cf. Gen 3:1. See also Isa 32:7; Mic 3:1-3; 7:3 (p. 56).

⁵⁸ V. 15a is difficult. Various emendations are suggested. See for ex. Dhorme, pp. 66-67; Gordis, Job, p. 57; Hartley, Job, p. 120 n. 6; Clines, p. 117. Reading מִפִּי חֶרֶב, 'from the mouth (i.e. edge) of the sword' would make most sense as it would parallel מִיַּד חֲזָק, 'from the hand of the mighty' perfectly. It is the personified Sword and Yahweh's mighty one that bring destruction (cf. Isa 28).

⁵⁹ Clines, p. 144.

The next section, vv. 17-26 is introduced by ⁶⁰הִנֵּה, ‘behold’ thus drawing the reader’s attention to what is to follow. One should be happy (אֲשֶׁר־י) that God (שִׁדְיִ/אֱלֹהִים)⁶¹ corrects him/her (יִכְחֶנֶי) and should not reject (אֶל־תִּמְאַס) his teaching (v. 17). Then Eliphaz elaborates on what Yahweh’s teaching method is like.⁶² The poet uses contrasting images as well as parallelism to illustrate it vividly introducing it with two short words: כִּי הוּא, ‘for (God) is he who’:

v. 18a cause pain/wounds	יִכְאִיב	⇔	but binds up	וַיִּחְבֹּשׁ
v. 18b strikes	יִמְחֹץ	⇔	his hands heal	תִּרְפִּינָה

God does not only teach but he delivers, and his saving act has positive consequences.

v. 19 a+b will rescue you יִצִּילְךָ therefore evil will not touch you לֹא־יִגַּע בְּךָ רָע

Using the number sequence six/seven (וּבְשֵׁבַע / בְּשֵׁשׁ) heightens the tension in the verse. There are seven calamities/distresses (צָרוֹת)⁶³ that Yahweh saves from.⁶⁴ These remind us of the seven scourges, there called ‘evils’ (רְעוֹת) and ‘my arrows’, (הַצִּי) in Deut 32:23-25.⁶⁵

The following verses list these distresses:⁶⁶

⁶⁰ Some suggest deleting it (e.g. LXX, P, Vg, Pope, NIV, NJB do not translate it) but Gordis, Job, p. 58; Clines, p. 117, are against this. KJV, RSV, Gibson, p. 49; Hartley, Job, p.123, and Whybray, p. 47, keep it and have ‘behold’. Dhorme translates ‘therefore’ (p. 67).

⁶¹ Here the name Shadday appears for the first time in Job. There are 48 occurrences in the OT, mostly in Job (30). The etymology is uncertain. LXX renders Παντοκράτωρ, Vg Domini, P ‘the Mighty’. See discussion in Pope, Job, p. 44; Hartley, Job, p. 123 n. 1; Clines, Job 1-20, p. 149. It is interesting to note that this divine name was also common in the patriarchal narratives (e.g. Gen 17:1; 28:3; 35:11; Exod 6:2-3).

⁶² This reminds us of the father-son relationship of Yahweh and Israel, cf. Deut. 32:5-6.

⁶³ Cf. Job 27: 9. Dhorme, Job, notes the use of the Hiphil, יִצִּילְךָ with צָרוֹת ‘to denote the idea of deliverance from calamity’ elsewhere in 1 Sam 26:24; Ps 54:9 (p. 69).

⁶⁴ On the number of the calamities see note 66 below.

⁶⁵ Compare Ezek. 14:13-20.

⁶⁶ Pope, Job, remarks that the use of the ‘graded numerical idiom’ is common in Ugaritic and Hebrew poetry, cf. Amos 1:3-13; 2:1-6; Mic 5:4; Prov 6:16; 30:15, 18, 29; Qoh 11:2; 25:7 (p. 44f/19). Some commentators (e.g. Dhorme, p. 69; Whybray, p. 48) argue that one should not attempt to find exactly six or seven calamities that Yahweh saves from, they are meant to encompass all kinds of evil. Others go to great length to identify exactly seven distresses. For example Gordis, Job, enlists the following ‘mass disasters’: famine, war, fire, flood, drought, rocks, and wild beasts. To find these he identifies תַּיִת הַשָּׂדֶה with תַּיִת הָאָרֶץ; finds that רָעַב and כַּפֵּן are different kinds of starvation, and takes לְשֹׁר וּלְכַפֵּן as a hendiadys ‘the devastation of drought’; regards שׁוּט לְשׁוֹן as an ellipsis for שׁוּט לְשׁוֹן אֵשׁ (hence ‘fire’); and שׁוּר as ‘flood’ (pp. 58-59). On these see the critique of Clines, p. 151. He

J. Blair 7. Reshef

- | | | |
|---|----------------------------|---|
| 1) famine | רָעָב (מָוֶת) (v. 20a) | // hunger כָּפֶן (v. 22a) |
| 2) sword | חֶרֶב (מְלָחְמָה) (v. 20b) | |
| 3) scourge | שׁוֹט (לְשׁוֹן) | (v. 21a) |
| 4) destruction | שָׂר | (v. 21b + 22a) |
| 5) beasts of the earth | חַיַּת הָאָרֶץ (v. 22b) | // beasts of the field חַיַּת הַשָּׂדֶה (23b) |
| 6) stones of the field | אֲבֵני הַשָּׂדֶה | (v. 23a) ⁶⁷ |
| 7) poverty (caused by theft/loss of property) | | (v. 24) |
| 8) loss of children | | (v. 25) |
| 9) early death | | (v. 26) |

The latter three calamities are alluded to in vv. 24-26 and not spelled out as such. The negation of these disasters carries in itself the blessing that one can expect as a consequence of Yahweh's saving act. Because he delivers (יִצִּילֶךָ, v. 19) and ransoms (פִּדְיָךְ, v. 20) from every disaster; and protects (lit. hides, חָבֵא, v. 21) one can have no fear and should not fear any longer (אֵל־תִּירָא and לֹא־תִירָא, v. 21+22), one can laugh (תִּשְׁחַק, v. 22) and even have covenant (בְּרִיתְךָ, v. 23) and peace (הַשְׁלָמָה־לְךָ, v. 23) with those that threatened them. The believer will know security (שְׁלוֹם אֲהַלְךָ, v. 24), prosperity (וּפְקֻדַּת נְוֶה וְלֹא תִחַטָּא, v. 24), will be blessed with countless descendants (רַב זְרַעְךָ, v. 25) and a long life (תִּבּוֹא בְּכֹלֶחַ, v. 25) and a long life (אֲלִי־קִבְרֶךָ, v. 26).

Finally v. 27 concludes (in prose) Eliphaz' speech. It is a 'summary appraisal' which 'proffers the final clue to its tonality and purpose.'⁶⁸ All that has been said contains not only Eliphaz' words but also the wisdom of others (the 'we' of the verb חָקַרְנוּ, 'we examined', חָקַרְנוּיָהּ). Now it is up to Job to apply all this to himself, וְאַתָּה דַע־לְךָ.

also gives two different sets of seven calamities. However, the point lies not in the number of distresses listed (as Clines also writes: 'The general point is in any case totally unaffected by our ability to determine seven distinct calamities.') but in Yahweh's power to save the believer from them. Yahweh is the only one who commands and controls these forces; they are his angels, the קְדָשִׁים who act on his behalf.

⁶⁷ Stones of the field are not usually listed as one of Yahweh's scourges but it is used in a personified sense in Hab 2:11 (stone will cry out); Zech 3:9 (has seven eyes). It represents danger in Prov 26:27; Num 35:23, and it is deadly (bringer of death i.e. stoning) in a number of other passages, e.g. Lam. 3:53; Ezek 23:47; 2 Chron 10:18; 24:21; 1Kgs 12:18; Lev 24:23. Dhorme referring to Mt 13:5 argues that 'the stones of the field are a real scourge, for they prevent fertility (p. 71/23). And they are precisely one of the means employed to devastate a country that is hostile (2 Kgs 3:19).' Similarly Clines, p. 152. For other interpretation see Gordis, Job, pp. 59-60; Hartley, Job, p. 124 n. 10.

⁶⁸ Clines, p. 153.

7.7 Canticles 8:6

v. 6

שִׁימְנֵי כַחוֹתֶם עַל־לִבְךָ כַחוֹתֶם עַל־זְרוּעֶיךָ כִּי־עֵזָה כַּמִּנֹּת אֶהְבֶּה קִשָּׁה כַּשְּׂאוּל
 קִנְיָה רְשָׁפִיהָ רְשָׁפִי אֵשׁ שְׁלֵה־בְתִיהָ:

Scholars are divided on the issue of the unity of Canticles. A. Brenner is a proponent of the ‘verbal interpretation’⁶⁹ arguing convincingly for it to be a ‘collection of love lyrics’ rather than a single poem.⁷⁰ Canticles has no narrative unity, any attempt to find a plot is forced.⁷¹ Brenner asserts that the ‘subject matter and theme’ of this ‘anthology of lyrics’ is ‘sexual love’; its components ‘are strung together by various and fairly loose principles of organization.’ Such interpretation implies that ‘the text should be taken at face value and interpreted accordingly.’⁷²

Here we follow Brenner and the NJB. NJB sees five poems and an epilogue present, the epilogue consisting of ch. 8 vv. 5-7. The poems are not relevant for our purposes thus we shall concentrate on the epilogue in our analysis.

V. 5 is usually taken as the first part being spoken by a chorus/friends and the second part beginning the Beloved’s poem about love.

V. 5a: introduction:

מִי זֹאת עֹלָה מִן־הַמִּדְבָּר מְתַרְפֶּקֶת עַל־דֹּדָהּ

Who is this coming up from the desert leaning on her lover?⁷³

⁶⁹ The term in biblical scholarship for the view that Canticles is an anthology of love poetry. See A. Brenner, The Song of Songs, OT Guides (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1989), p. 39.

⁷⁰ Brenner, ch. 3.

⁷¹ Brenner, p. 39.

⁷² Brenner, pp. 67-68. She allows for the possibility, at least in theory, for a multi-levelled interpretation.

⁷³ V. 5a is a repetition of v. 3a, but the contexts differ. It is interesting to note that LXX has λελευκανθισμενη, ‘made white’ instead of מִן־הַמִּדְבָּר, ‘from the desert’. Pope argues that this was because of LXX’s concern about the ‘black beauty’ of 1:5. He writes: ‘It seems clear, however, that the deviations from MT were motivated by concern for blanching the black beauty of 1:5.’ See M. H. Pope, Song of Songs: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1977), p. 662. מְתַרְפֶּקֶת is a hapax legomenon, but the root רִפַּק is known in Semitic languages. See Pope, Song, pp. 662-663; R. E. Murphy, The Song of Song: A Commentary on the Book of Canticles or The Song of Songs (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress Press, 1990), p. 191. An interesting interpretation is given by O. Keel, The Song of Songs: A Continental Commentary, transl. by F. J. Gaiser (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1994), pp. 265-266.

V. 5b: the subject of the verb רפק begins her song about her lover (ד'נה) then about love in general.⁷⁴

תחת התפוח עוררתיו שמה חבלתך אמה שמה חבלה ילדתך:

Beneath the apple tree⁷⁵ I roused you;⁷⁶

There your mother conceived you;

There she conceived you [and] she gave you birth⁷⁷.

Vv. 6-7 are about love:

שימני כחותם על לבך כחותם על זרועך כיעזה כמות אהבה קשה כשאל
קנאה רשפה רשפי אש שלהבתיה:

Place me like a seal over your heart,

like a seal on your arm;

for love is as strong as death, its jealousy unyielding as the grave.

It burns like blazing fire,

Like a mighty flame. (NIV)

⁷⁴ Keel, Song, p. 267, sees no connection between this 'short poem' and the previous or the following lines. 'Neither form nor content has much to do with what goes before (8:5ab), and one can make a connection with what follows (8:6-7) only at a fairly high level of abstraction.' Further he argues that 'this short poem was probably inserted here because of the catchword "awaken" (8:4c).' It is quite possible that he is right, but it is also possible to see connection between these verses (as is done here). It is very difficult to decide what is a right division, since, as Brenner argues, the poems sometimes 'simply "run" into each other to the point of fusion' and at other times 'no principle of association is recognizable.' Here we have perhaps one of the 'extended units that are made up of smaller individual poems'. (Brenner, pp. 15-16).

⁷⁵ The apple tree has erotic and mythological associations. See comments in Pope, Song, p. 663; Keel, Song, commentary on 2:3ab and 5. Here Keel (p. 269) sees it as representing 'the family tree seen from an erotic perspective' (cf. Isa 11:1; Ezek 17). Christian allegorists identified it with the Cross of Christ and the tree of the Garden of Eden. (Pope, Song, p. 665)

⁷⁶ In MT's reading the woman is the speaker. Some commentators suggest changing the vocalization to read 2nd f. suffixes instead of m. (as P does). Although the MT reading does not seem to support the allegorical interpretations (Israel the bride, Yahweh the bridegroom), commentators such as Pope, Murphy and Keel rightly choose MT as preferable. Pope, Song, argues 'that this reading was preserved through centuries of allegorical interpretation suggests that it was so well established and known that it could not be changed but was left for moderns to correct.' (p. 663) Keel, Song points out that in the ANE goddesses were often portrayed as the active partners in love relationships (p. 268).

⁷⁷ The verb חבל can be used of the woman's labour and childbirth (cf. Isa 13:8; 26:17; Jer 13:21; Hos 13:13) but also of conception (cf. Ps 7:15). Pope, Song, writes: 'In the present passage the repetition of the verb could refer to the same phase of the generative process, or to different phases, i.e. to conception in both instances, or travail in both, or to conception in the former instance and travail in the latter. Without knowledge of the affair in question one can only speculate.' (p. 664)

The reason for the beloved's desire to be one with her lover is simply that she loves him in the true sense of the word; loves him until death. The seriousness and gravity of her statement are indeed strongly emphasised by her comparison. In this series of similes we see Love personified, her strength compared to that of Mot. In parallel with Love, Jealousy also appears, her cruelty compared to that of Sheol. When love is tainted by jealousy it can be cruel as it can inspire one to terrible things. Love that lasts until death can bring jealousy forth, and thus it can cause death.⁸⁴ It is understandable that the poet talks about her 'plagues'. Jealousy is love's plague; it is deadly and it burns like fire. The poet is deliberately playing on the words. The image of fire, שֵׁן, implies the association of רְשָׁפִיָּהּ with it. The word can be translated as either 'plagues' or 'flames' but possibly both meanings were meant. Both love and jealousy burn like fire, are destroying like the Reshefs of Fire, רְשָׁפִי שֵׁן (the sons of Reshef in Job 5:7 ?). The presence of Reshef (or Reshefs) is not surprising, though perhaps we would have expected Deber or Qeteb as Mot and Sheol are also present (cf. Hos 13:14). The fact that they are interchangeable and that here Reshef is used in the plural can be explained by our earlier suggestion that in fact deber, qeteb or reshef are not personal names but functions that any of Yahweh's angels/agents can take on.⁸⁵ In fact this is made clear by the striking one-word identification of the Reshefs of Fire as שְׁלֵה־בְתִירָה 'a Flame of Yahweh'. The choice of reshef here adds an extra possibility to the poet, the play on the sound ש in the last four words.

The mythological dimension gives depth to the meaning of the poem, and it is a poetical device well-loved by the Hebrew poets. Leaving this element out of the translations takes away from the beauty of the poem and does not do justice to the skill of the poet.

v. 7a	Great Waters are not able to quench Love	מִיָּם רַבִּים לֹא יוּכְלוּ לְכַבּוֹת אֶת־הָאֵהָבָה
v. 7b	nor Rivers	וְנַהֲרֹת לֹא יִשְׁטְפוּהָ engulf Her

⁸⁴ The love-jealousy-death theme is very common in literature and music around the world. See for example W. Shakespeare's Othello, F. García Lorca's Blood Wedding, or Puccini's Tosca, to mention just a few.

⁸⁵ See above 5.6 and 6.6.

J. Blair 7. Reshef

Fire imagery turns to its opposite, water in v. 7 a and b. Fire's enemies are Great Waters and Rivers. He is overcome by them but Love is stronger because it cannot be destroyed even by these great enemies.⁸⁶

v. 7d if a person would give all the wealth of his house for Love

אִם-יִתֵּן אִישׁ אֶת-כָּל-הוֹן בֵּיתוֹ בְּאַהֲבָה⁸⁷

v. 7e he would be utterly despised.

בּוֹז יִבּוֹזוּ לוֹ

V. 7d and e use yet other imagery. When someone is threatened by something that is very powerful and strong, that person would try to destroy it. When that fails he/she then tries to buy it. Love cannot be destroyed, neither can it be bought. Trying would only bring contempt on one who attempts it. The poet expresses his disgust for such a person. The long build up of 7d (8 words) is contrasted with the short, sharp result in 7e which is striking in the Hebrew but not so clear in the translations.

7.8 Conclusion of reshef

Following our discussion of the occurrences of רֶשֶׁף in the Hebrew Bible we can conclude the following: the assumption that Reshef appears in the Hebrew Bible as a 'demon' is not supported by the texts.

Of the seven occurrences Reshef is once a proper noun, the name of one of Ephraim's descendants. In two passages, Deut 32: 24 and Hab 3:5, it occurs in the singular, and in the other passages in the plural with various associations; as רֶשֶׁפִּים in Ps 78:48; רֶשֶׁפִּי-קִשְׁתַּי in Ps 76: 4; בְּנֵי-רֶשֶׁף in Job 5:7, and רֶשֶׁפִּיָּהּ רֶשֶׁפִּי אִשׁ in Cant 8:7. All of these passages are poetical. It was argued that the best interpretation is to regard the term in these passages as personified. In none of the passages does Reshef(s) appear alone; it is always accompanied by other destructive forces, who are agents or enemies of Yahweh but always inferior to him. In Deuteronomy 32 Reshef is one of seven Evils/Arrows, the Famine, Qeteb, Wild Animals, Snakes, Sword and Terror; in Habakkuk 3 together with Deber he is one of Yahweh's attendants. Job is similar to Deuteronomy in that here too we have Sword, Famine, Wild Animals, Six/Seven Calamities as well as Stones together with the Sons of Reshef. Psalm 78

⁸⁶ Great or Mighty Waters and Rivers are also mythological elements, they are reminiscent of the waters of chaos and Yahweh's battle with them. Cf. Gen 1; Isa 51:9-10; Ps 76:12-14. See also Pope, Song, pp. 672-675.

⁸⁷ Cf. Prov 6: 31. Also Pope, Song, pp. 675-677; Murphy, p. 192; Gordis, Song, p. 4:99; Keel, Song, p. 276.

J. Blair 7. Reshef

lists a number of destructive forces: blood, flies, frogs, grasshoppers, locusts, hail, sleet, as well as the company of Angels of Evils, Deber, Fury, Anger and Distress. In Psalm 76 the context is military, thus we have Bow, Shield, Sword and Battle, but the similarities with Hosea 2:18(20) where wild animals, creatures of the ground (snakes?) and birds of the sky also appear allow us to conjecture that perhaps behind the plural of רִשְׁפֵי־קָשָׁת other destructive forces are also meant.

In Canticles 8 the Reshefs of Fire appear with Mot, Sheol, Love and Jealousy, Flame of Yahweh, Mighty Waters and Rivers, again as destructive forces.

In all of the above passages the forces that appear bring destruction and death, they come from Yahweh as a punishment or their purpose is to inspire awe and fear of Yahweh. Through them Yahweh's power is manifested.

In most cases רִשְׁפֵי was translated with 'plague' in the sense of a destructive force; this fits all the contexts. In some instances Reshef was left untranslated as this reflects the mythological dimension of the texts better. However, even in these cases there is nothing to support a demonological interpretation of Reshef. Any arguments to the contrary would be reading into the text. Even though there is a possible connection to the Semitic deity Reshef, the mythological motifs in the Old Testament are used merely as a poetic device. Similarly to Deber and Qeteb, Reshef is best regarded as one of Yahweh's Angels of Evil (Ps 78, Deut 32) or Holy Ones (Job 5, Hab 3). As in the case of Deber and Qeteb, there is no evidence to suggest that Deber, Qeteb or Reshef are used as proper nouns, they are best regarded as functions (to bring destruction) that any of Yahweh's angels could take on.

MAIN CONCLUSION OF INVESTIGATION

This thesis has challenged the common view that azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshaf are names of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew Bible, claiming that major works on the subject proceed from the assumption that these terms were demons in the ancient Near East and /or later, or that they were deities who became ‘demonised’ by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. Without questioning the validity of traditional methods in exegesis this thesis supplements the existing works by making an exegetical study of all the texts of the Hebrew Bible in which these five terms occur.

Chapter 1 has placed the present study within the existing scholarship, and has shown that early works on ‘OT demonology’ were based on Mesopotamian and/or Canaanite parallels, and were concerned with tracing the development of Jewish demonology from its origins through the Old Testament to later times. Terms that early scholars (Witton Davies, Oesterley or Langton, and others) have identified as ‘demons’, modern scholars still regard as such (Burrelli, Keel, Fabry, and others).

As there are many difficulties in the approaches to the treatment of ‘OT demons’, and in particular many weaknesses in the interpretation of the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshaf, the research goal of the present study is to take a close look at the Hebrew texts where these five terms occur and to answer the question whether they are names of ‘demons’ in the Hebrew texts as we have them today.

This aim is achieved through an exegesis based on a Close Reading of all the relevant biblical passages, paying close attention to the linguistic, semantic, and structural levels of the texts. The emphasis is on a close examination of the immediate context in order to determine the function (and where possible the meaning) of each term. Different signals within the texts are noted, especially the use of the various poetical/rhetorical devices: personification, parallelism, similes, irony, and mythological elements.

Before turning to the Hebrew texts where the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshaf occur, Chapter 2 takes a close look at the history of interpretation of these. Here I have demonstrated that the consensus of early 20th century scholars regarding of what constitutes a ‘demon’ in the Old Testament has not been challenged by more recent scholarship. Biblical scholars still commonly turn to the ancient Near Eastern religions and cultures to explain difficult passages in the Hebrew Bible, to find parallels or the 'original' of difficult terms and concepts. While comparative material is useful it has to be handled carefully as it raises other issues.

J. Blair Conclusion

The history of research of the term azazel shows that though there are various interpretations, the most common is that it is the name of a 'demon'. This interpretation is mainly based on the existence of similar rites in the ancient Near East to the 'scapegoat rite' described in Lev 16, and the fact that a demon named Asael or Azazel was known in post-biblical literature. However, the validity of this evidence has been questioned. Indeed the rite described in Lev 16 has similarities to Hittite, Mesopotamian and other ancient Near Eastern rites, however, the fact that there are significant differences should not be ignored. Even acknowledging the similarities it is questionable whether these rites can be used to explain the meaning and the function of the term azazel in Lev 16. The evidence from the Book of Enoch is also questionable. Its demonology is based on an interpretation of Gen 6:1-4, the fall of angels and the origins of sin which is not present in the Hebrew Bible. It is more likely that similarly to the case of Gen 6:1-4, the story of Asael/Azazel in the Book of Enoch is an interpretation and elaboration of Lev 16 based on some similarities.

The history of interpretation of lilith shows that to interpret Isa 34:14 scholars refer to the similarity of the term with the name of the demoness Lilith, known from ancient Mesopotamia and later Jewish belief. This figure emerged from the fusion of the ancient lilitu/ardat lili demons and Lamaštu, and was made into a well known and 'popular' demon thanks to Jewish mysticism and 19th – 20th century artists. It is understandable that anyone familiar with Lilith's name would inevitably think of the demoness as known since medieval times. Perhaps the interpreters of Isa 34:14 were influenced by their knowledge of this Lilith.

The history of research on deber, qeteb and reshef shows that their interpretation as 'demons' is a circular one. The argument that deber is a 'demon' is generally based on a discussion of only three texts and the presupposition that reshef with whom it appears in two of these texts, and qeteb with whom it appears in one text, are also 'demons'. It also relies on evidence from the ancient Near East which is scant and questionable. The situation is similar with qeteb and reshef too, with the addition of citing later Jewish belief in the case of qeteb. The existence of a mythological figure, a deity or demon qtb from Assyria or Ugarit is questionable, and later Jewish belief which knew of a demon called Qeteb should be used with caution. That reshef is a ‘demon’ in the Hebrew Bible is based on the general consensus that it is the name of the known deity Reshef, and the view that foreign deities are demonised by the authors of the Hebrew Bible. That a deity called Reshef was well known in the ancient Near East is unquestionable but, as we have seen, his association with plague or disease is only one of his aspects. His major characteristic seems to be that of a god of war and protector of kings.

J. Blair Conclusion

The following chapters (3-7) present an exegesis of all the Hebrew texts in which the terms azazel, lilith, deber, qeteb and reshef occur.

In Chapter 3 azazel is examined in its context, Leviticus 16. It is concluded that the azazel rite forms an integral part of the ‘כִּפֹּר –act’, the purpose of which is to cleanse and sanctify the altar and the people. The live goat removes their sin and guilt by literally taking it outside of the community, into the desert, away from the sanctuary. The sanctuary represents the presence of Yahweh, the order of creation, while the desert where azazel is found, stands for the chaos that threatens it.

We cannot draw any conclusions regarding the meaning of the term, it remains unknown. The parallelism with Yahweh in v. 8 suggests that it is a proper name of a supernatural being whose place is in the desert. However, there is nothing to suggest that it would refer to a ‘demon’ named Azazel. Despite the various efforts of scholars to prove otherwise, there is no evidence that a mythological figure was behind this term. Azazel’s significance in Lev 16 is its symbolic function. Azazel appears as the personification of the forces of chaos that threaten the order of creation; his role is to stand in contrast to Yahweh.

In Chapter 4 the term lilith is examined together with other difficult-to-interpret terms, that are also believed by some to be references to demons (particularly by their association with lilith). It is shown that although most of these are difficult to translate exactly, and in many cases only a general designation can be offered, the contexts in which they occur do not support a demonological interpretation for any of them. They are real animals and birds who inhabit desert and ruined places, some of them scavengers who feast on dead bodies. Like the other terms, לִילִית also refers to an animal, more specifically, a bird. Driver’s suggestion that לִילִית is a night bird is found to be the most plausible explanation of term, one that fits the context. In Isaiah 34, after the complete destruction of Edom and all its people and livestock, only these wild scavengers would be able to survive. Thus there is nothing to support the view that lilith or the other terms are ‘demons’ or other mythological characters.

J. Blair Conclusion

Chapter 5 examines all the occurrences of deber, looking first at the three passages that are generally considered to contain deber as a demon, then the occurrences in Jeremiah, Ezekiel and other parts of the Hebrew Bible. It is concluded that Ps 91, Hos 13 and Hab 3, poetical passages, present deber as a personified dangerous force which brings death and destruction. As such he appears as one of Yahweh’s agents who carries out his punishment or simply emphasises his awesome power as a member of his retinue. In Jeremiah most often it appears with ‘sword’ and ‘famine’ (15x), deadly forces that always come as a punishment from Yahweh for the Israelites’ disobedience (mostly idolatry). Although its personification is only clearly suggested in one passage (Jer 21:6), the others also offer this possibility. In Ezekiel also (11x) deber occurs as a personified deadly force accompanied by others; often by ‘sword’ and ‘famine’, but other elements such as dam (bloodshed) and hayyah ra’ah (beings of evil) also occur. They all are presented as Yahweh’s agents of punishment.

This is also the case in all the other occurrences of the term. Some passages present the personified deber more clearly (Deut 28, Exod 9, 2 Sam 24, Ps 78) than others but there are links between these and the latter passages which suggest that the term should be taken as personified in these too. When personified, deber is presented as one of Yahweh’s angels (Ps 91, Ps 78 and 2 Sam 24), one of the the malache ra’im. In fact there is no evidence to suggest that this was one particular angel and that thus deber would be a proper noun. It is rather a function. Any of Yahweh’s angels could be a deber, a bringer of ‘disease’ or ‘destruction’ which in most cases results in death.

In Chapter 6 all the occurrences of qeteb are examined. A conclusion similar to the previous chapter is reached. In all four passages Qeteb appears in a personified sense, as an agent of Yahweh, possibly one of his angels of evil. However, there is nothing to support a demonological interpretation in any of the passages. Furthermore, as in the case of deber, there is no evidence to suggest that qeteb was the name of one particular angel of Yahweh. Any of Yahweh’s angels could be a qeteb, a ‘scourge’, a ‘bringer of destruction’.

J. Blair Conclusion

The final chapter (7) looks at all the occurrences of reshef, and concludes that the assumption that reshef appears in the Hebrew Bible as a 'demon' is not supported by the texts. Similarly to deber and qeteb, reshef also appears as a destructive force bringing death or inspiring awe and fear of Yahweh. Similarly to Deber and Qeteb, Reshef is best regarded as one of Yahweh's Angels of Evil (Ps 78, Deut 32) or Holy Ones (Job 5, Hab 3). As in the case of Deber and Qeteb, there is no evidence to suggest that Reshef is used as a proper noun, they are best regarded as functions (to bring destruction) that any of Yahweh's angels could take on. Whereas in the case of deber and qeteb there was no evidence that a mythological figure would lie behind them in the texts in the Hebrew Bible, with reshef there is the possibility of a connection to the Semitic deity Reshef. In this case the mythological elements are used as poetic device.

A general thought emerges from this thesis: arguing that biblical authors had demythologised the Hebrew texts in order to 'cover up' the presence of some 'demons' would be denying the skills of the ancient poets/authors who used various poetical devices (parallelism, irony, personification as well as mythology) to convey their message in the most powerful way possible.

It is the hope of the present author that this thesis has made an important and lasting contribution to the exegesis of texts relating to 'OT demonology', leaving the field open for the investigation of further terms. On a methodological level, it is hoped that this study has highlighted the importance of recognising the techniques used by the ancient poets/authors in order to aid understanding. Although in recent years a lot of studies have been dedicated to the study of biblical imagery and the use of metaphor in particular, biblical scholarship could benefit from further investigation into this area.

APPENDIX I: RESHEF IN THE RITUAL TEXTS OF UGARIT

1. KTU 1.39 (RS 1.001)¹ I: 4, 7, 16

This was the first text discovered at Rash Shamra. It is unique in that of the texts discovered so far, this is the only one that contains an independent rite taking place over one day and night. The text lists the various types of sacrifices which were related to the royal funerary cult: šrp-šlmm, urm, šnpt, pgr. Reshef receives a ewe (dqt) as a holocaust offering (šrp) twice (l. 4 and 16), and a ram (š) as a peace offering (šlmm) once. In l. 4 Reshef follows tkmn wšnm, in l. 7 he is placed between Anat and the ‘family of El (dr il), and in l. 16 between trt and Anat hbly. The fact that Reshef appears three times in the same text points to the significance of his role in this type of cult, i.e. royal and funerary.²

2. KTU 1.41 (RS 1.003)³ I:13, 16, 28-29 and KTU 1.87 (RS 18.056)⁴ I: 14, 17, 31-32

These two texts are virtual duplicates, and they also almost repeat part of the previous text too.⁵ The recipients of the offerings are a group of deities: b’lt bhtm, inš il, ilš, and ilhm. These (except ilš) belong to the cult of palace and the dead and deified kings who became gods of the palace. Reshef appears again together with tkmn wšnm as the recipient of a ewe (dqt) as a burnt-offering (šrp), with Anat receiving a ram (š), and in the restored lines 28-29, following Šapš, he receives a cow (gdlt) as a burnt-offering (šrp). Once again Reshef appears in a text relating to royal and funerary cult.

¹ For the text see KTU, p. 74-75; for text, translation and comments see del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 67-69, 213-217; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 15- 91; Ritual and Cult, pp. 67-69.

² Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 218.

³ For text see KTU p. 77-79; for text, translation and comments see De Moor, ARTU, pp. 157-165; Olmo Lete, Canaanite Religion, pp. 107-112, 122-125; Pardee, Texts Rituels, pp. 143- 213 esp. p. 184-185; Ritual and Cult, pp. 56-65.

⁴ Cf. KTU, pp. 106-108; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 469- 478; Ritual and Cult, pp. 56-65.

⁵ KTU 1.41: 12-19/ KTU 1.87:13-21 // KTU 1.39: 3-10.

3. KTU 1. 47 (RS 1. 017)⁶ l: 27 // KTU 1. 118 (RS 24. 264)⁷ // (RS 20. 024) // KTU 1.148 (RS 24. 643)⁸

These four texts, though discovered at different times, contain more or less the same list of deities, the so called ‘canonical list’. The first two are in Ugaritic, the third is an Akkadian (syllabic) translation, and the fourth contains the key to understanding the texts.⁹ The list begins with the supreme deity, ilib/il/dgn being his names/titles.¹⁰ The next group consists of seven Baals, or rather a recitation of his names seven times. This is followed by a group of seven deities, headed by arṣ wšmm, ‘Earth and Heaven’, representing the chthonic-astral deities. The next group again consists of seven deities, headed by grm w’mqt, ‘Mountains and Valleys’ and then followed by six goddesses. The last group in the two lists has nine deities, whereas KTU 1. 148 has only seven. They are called il t’dr b’l, ‘the helper gods of Baal’. Reshef is found in this group. The Akkadian text identifies him with Nergal. Del Olmo thinks that this list is not hierarchical, in the sense that the order of the deities does not reflect their importance. Therefore that Reshef is found in the last group of deities does not imply that he was less important than the preceding gods.¹¹

KTU 1.148 has a ršp idrp in l. 32, identified with [DINGIR ?] -it-ri-ib-bi in the Akkadian text. Pardee remarks that this composite theonym is only attested here and there are two possibilities of interpreting it; it is either a place name or it is an ‘attribution exprimée par un nom ou un adjectif’.¹²

⁶ KTU, pp. 83-84; Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 71-78; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 291- 319; Ritual and Cult, pp. 12-16.

⁷ KTU pp. 132-1333; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 659-660; Ritual and Cult, pp. 12-16.

⁸ KTU pp. 145-146; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 779- 806; Ritual and Cult, pp. 12-16.

⁹ KTU 1. 148 was a ‘liturgical model for the great “Sacrifice to Sapanu”’ (del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 71).

¹⁰ On the equation of il and dgn and for references see del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 74, n. 78.

¹¹ Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 315-317. Pardee remarks that it is very difficult to relate this text to any mythological ones, though attempts have been made (e.g. by Xella), partly because there are a number of deities that do not appear in mythological texts.

¹² See Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 802 and n. 119, 120.

4. KTU 1.78 (RS 12.061)¹³

There is no agreement as to the interpretation of this short text, which seems to be an astronomical text of some sort. As Pardee remarks, ‘this very brief text has caused a great deal of ink to flow because of various attempts to interpret it as reflecting a solar eclipse.’¹⁴ While Wyatt, del Olmo and others follow the eclipse interpretation, Pardee is not convinced of this. Instead he argues that the text refers to ‘a repeated sighting of Mars (= Rašap) at sundown for six days in a row, after which the planet would no longer have been visible at sundown.’¹⁵

The reverse of the tablet contains two lines which again can be variously interpreted because of epigraphic uncertainties. Thus according to some it refers to livers being consulted (reading {kb dm} at the beginning of line 5), while others interpret it as a request to the governor of the city to appoint specialists who can interpret the sighting. Here are some of the translations;

KTU	Pardee	Del Olmo	Wyatt
1. btt . ym . hdt hyr . ‘rbt	During the six days of the new-moon festival of the month of Hiyyaru, the sun (Šapšu)	At six of the new moon of Hiyyaru	At the sixth (hour) of the first day of Hiyyar the sun set,
špš tgrh	set, her gatekeeper being	Šapšu/the sun set(s)	Her attendant being Mars. / The first day of Hiyyar was put to shame:
ršp	Rasap.	Her gatekeeper being Rašpu.	the sun set, her attendant being Mars.
rev.	The men (?) shall seek out
5. kbdm tbqrn		Two livers	Livers were

¹³ KTU pp. 97-98; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 416- 427; Ritual and Cult, pp. 131-133.

¹⁴ Ritual and Cult, p. 131. For a thorough discussion of the text and references to various other interpretations see Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 416-427 and notes. See also del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 350-351 and n. 66; Wyatt, RTU, pp. 366-367; Fulco, pp. 39-40.

¹⁵ As note above.

J. Blair Appendix: Reshef in the Ritual Texts

skn	the governor.	are/shall be examined; (There is) danger.	examined. / Livers were examined: beware!
------------	--------------------------	---	---

I agree with del Olmo's suggestion that this text appears to be a mythological interpretation of an astronomical phenomenon (whether a solar eclipse or a sighting of Mars),¹⁶ hence depicting Reshef as the gatekeeper of Šapš. If Reshef was regarded as god of the underworld (as his identification with Nergal suggests), seeing Šapš entering through his gates could mean seeing the sun goddess being swallowed up by the underworld deity. Indeed such would support a solar eclipse interpretation.¹⁷

5. KTU 1.79 (RS 13.006) I. 8¹⁸

This short text is difficult to interpret because of its state of preservation.¹⁹ Following Pardee's interpretation, we find that a priest called Šitqānu, assisted by Ħasanu, sacrifices (dbh.) a kid and myrrh to Rašap. Pardee classifies this text as a rural sacrificial text. The only deity mentioned is Reshef.²⁰ Perhaps this suggests that Reshef was not only a royal god but also popular with the people outside the city of Ugarit.²¹

¹⁶ Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 350-351. For references on the various attempts at dating the phenomenon see p. 351 n. 67, and Wyatt, RTU, p. 366.

¹⁷ Pardee identifies Reshef with Mars. 'Rašap, as one of the principal deities of the underworld is depicted as opening the gates of the realm to allow the sun to enter. As god of the army (Rasap Saba'i) and of the underworld, Rašap may correspond to classical Mars.' (Ritual and Cult, p. 133 n. 15). See also Niehr, pp. 87-88.

¹⁸ KTU, p. 98; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 428-434; Ritual and Cult, pp. 119-220.

¹⁹ Pardee (see note above) classifies it as a rural sacrificial text, however KTU seems uncertain whether it is a scribal exercise or a sacrificial list.

²⁰ Pardee remarks that the offering of a goat is quite unusual in similar texts (Ritual and Cult, p. 119).

²¹ This is supported by the fact that he is mentioned in relation to sacrifices in the local community. See M. Heltzer, The Rural Community in Ancient Ugarit (Wiesbaden: Dr Ludwig Reichert Verlag, 1976), pp. 71-74.

6. KTU 1.90 (RS 19.013) I.: 2; 20 // KTU 1.168 (RIH 77/10B⁺)²²

These two texts along with some others²³ were found in a palace at Ras Ibn Hani close to Ugarit, probably an alternative royal residence. The ‘list of gods in these texts shows a marked dynastic character.’²⁴ These texts can be classed as belonging to the royal liturgy as the king is ‘expressly mentioned as the officiant in the ritual’.

Del Olmo suggests that the offering here might be of atonement or have an apotropaic nature (ap wnpš / ksp whrš).

In both these texts ršp appears in a composite form as ršp h.gb.²⁵ Scholars interpret h.gb differently. Del Olmo takes it as an offering whereas Pardee sees ršp h.gb as a form of Reshef. ‘Rašap est l’une des divinités qui se manifestent sous plusieurs formes...’²⁶

There have been two main etymologies proposed for h.gb; 1) Hebrew חגב, ‘grasshopper/ locust’; and 2) Arabic h.āgib^{um}, ‘chamberlain, gatekeeper’. The justification given to the first etymology is that Nergal/Reshef is the god of plague and, the locust that devours everything in its way, is a kind of plague. The second suggestion argues that the role of Reshef as gatekeeper has already been established in KTU 1.78. Both of these etymologies have difficulties as Pardee points out. For example the main problem with the first one is that nowhere is Reshef represented as a grasshopper or locust; with the second that there are no other NW Semitic attestations of this root with similar meaning.

Pardee remarks that it is impossible to decide which if any of these suggestions is the right one. One has also to consider the possibility of h.gb being a toponym as is the case with ršp gn and ršp bbt.²⁷

²² KTU, pp. 108-109; Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 321-323; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 479-88; Ritual and Cult, pp. 72-77.

²³ Those mentioning Reshef, are KTU 1.165 and 1.171.

²⁴ Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 318.

²⁵ In KTU 1.90 there is also a ršp in l. 20. ršp h.gb appears 4x, in KTU 1.90, 1.106, 1.134 and 1.168.

²⁶ Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 485.

²⁷ Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 484-485.

7. KTU 1.91 (RS 19.015)²⁸ I: 11, 15

This administrative text is a cultic record; it is a list of royal rituals (dbh mlk). It deals with the quantity of wine to be supplied by the various towns mentioned on the reverse. It also specifies the time of the consumption giving a list of ‘royal sacrifices’. The importance of this text lies in the possibility it presents of identifying the rituals it refers to.²⁹

Reshef is mentioned in line 11 (in the dual or plural) and then in line 15 with the epithet sbi, ršp sbi.

Line 11 reads: k. t'rbn. ršpm. bt. mlk

(the sacrifices) for when the Ršpm (Rašapuma) enter the palace

Line 15 reads: b. gb. ršp. sbi

Pardee translates, ‘the sacrifices in the sacrificial pit of Rašap Saba'I’ and del Olmo ‘(the one) of the gb(?) of Rašpu of the army’.

Del Olmo takes line 11 to refer to KTU 1.106 because there we also have ‘two’ ršpm mentioned together (lines 1 and 6), and line 15 to refer to KTU 1.105:14ff ([b]gb ršp...), both having a funerary (and royal) character.³⁰ However, Pardee is not convinced that the link between the two texts is certain enough to permit us to determine whether the form ršpm in line 11 is a dual or a plural form.³¹ Both are possible; if the text uses KTU 1.106 where we have the mention of a ršp h.gb and ršp mhbn, then the dual seems more likely, however, if KTU 1.91 does not allude to the rite of which KTU 1.106 is part of then there is no particular reason to regard the ršpm as dual.³² The plural is equally as possible as we know of several manifestations of Reshef. In fact this is the more likely interpretation since we have here a ršp sbi, different from the ones in KTU 1.106. Pardee mentions another ²⁸ KTU p. 109; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 87-88; 255-64; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 489-519; Ritual and Cult, pp. 214-216.

²⁹ On these rituals see del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 257-259.

³⁰ Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 261-263.

³¹ Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 506.

³² Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 507.

possible interpretation of the ršpm, according to which they would be identified with the Gatarūma;³³ however he does not think this likely.³⁴

Pardee agrees with del Olmo that line 15 is part of a rite that is independent from the previous one. He favours taking ršp s.bi as a composite theophoric name, and the fact that in Ugaritic as in other Semitic languages s.aba'u generally has the collective meaning of 'army, crew' suggests that s.bi is a divine epithet and so ršp s.bi is best translated as 'Reshef of the army'.³⁵ Pardee thus argues that this epithet alludes to Reshef's warrior-like character but it remains uncertain what/which 'army' was envisaged.³⁶

8. KTU 1.100 (RS 24. 244) (ridding the land of serpents)³⁷

The text appears to be a ritual which is concerned with curing snakebite, embedded in a myth that also contains incantatory elements.³⁸ A mare whose foal had been bitten by a snake appeals to twelve divinities for help. The text has three main parts: 1) request for help eleven times with negative outcome 2) the twelfth request to Horon results in positive outcome 3) marriage negotiations between Horon and the mare. In the first section the appeals are addressed to Šapš who acts as a messenger. Important deities³⁹ of the Ugaritic pantheon such as: El, Baal, Dagan, Anat and Athtart, Yarih, Reshef, Athtart, Zizzu and Kemosh, Milk, Kothar-and-Hasis, Shahar and Shalem are asked for their help, but they seem to be ineffectual. Only the last, Horon brings cure.

³³ Proposed by Xella. See reference in Pardee, Testes Rituels, p. 507 n. 70.

³⁴ Pardee, Testes Rituels, p. 507.

³⁵ Pardee, Testes Rituels, p. 512 and n. 97 there for various translations and their references of ršp s.bi.

³⁶ There is only one mention of a ršp s.bi in this text. Niehr also sees the warrior aspect of the god in this and the previous text. He writes: 'Hierdurch wird der Pest- wie auch der Kriegscharacter des Gottes hervorgehoben.' The first part of his comment is intriguing though (p. 88).

³⁷ Pardee, 'Incantations', pp. 295-298; Ritual and Cult, pp. 173-179; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 359-371; Wyatt, RTU, pp.378-387.

³⁸ Wyatt, RTU, p. 378 and Pardee, 'Incantations', p. 295; Ritual and Cult, p. 173 see this text as a rite in myth- form, whereas del Olmo classifies it as incantation (Canaanite Religion, p. 359).

³⁹ It is interesting that Horon, who seems to be an important god in exorcistic contexts, is absent from the pantheon lists of KTU 1.47 and parallels. See comment in Wyatt, RTU, p. 384 n. 25, who cautions against drawing rash conclusions, keeping in mind that the evidence we have from Ugarit is only a cross-section of its culture and religion.

J. Blair Appendix: Reshef in the Ritual Texts

An interesting feature of this text is that it connects each of the deities to a place, though some of these (e.g. Hryt, Msd) are unknown. Thus El at the Source of the rivers, Baal in the heights of Mt. Saphon, Dagan in Tuttul,⁴⁰ Anat and Athtart in Inbub,⁴¹ Yarih in Lrgt,⁴² Reshef in Bibitta,⁴³ Athtart in Mari, Zizzu and Kemosh in Hryt, Milk in Athtarat, Kothar-and-Hasis in Crete, Shahr and Shalem in Heaven, and Horon in Msd.⁴⁴

This text is similar in some ways to RS 24.251/KTU 1.107⁴⁵ which is another mythological incantation⁴⁶ dealing with snakebite. The deities involved are virtually the same as in KTU 1.100. The difference is that they are not mentioned in connection to a place name (with the exception of Milk) and that they are listed in pairs.⁴⁷ Thus Reshef here is paired with Yarih. The question is why? Was Yarih related to the underworld?

9. KTU 1.102 (RS 24. 246)⁴⁸ I: 10

The text appears to be a list of names of gods in two parts. Lines 1-14 is simply a list of divine names whereas lines 15-28 are 'sentence names', they are possibly hypostases of two or more divinities.⁴⁹ Reshef appears in line 10 in company with ⁴⁰ Cf. Mari texts (ref. in del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 363 n. 98).

⁴¹ cf. KTU 1.3 iv 34.

⁴² cf. KTU 1.24.

⁴³ It is an unknown place but it occurs in connection with Reshef in other cultic texts (KTU 1.105:1; 1.171:3). See also Wyatt, RTU, p. 381 n. 17.

⁴⁴ Wyatt translates 'the fortress' (RTU, p. 384). Pardee notes that the common noun may mean 'fortress' but the interpretation of it as a town, though unknown at present, is preferable (Ritual and Cult, p. 187 n. 30).

⁴⁵ See Wyatt, RTU, pp. 393-394; Pardee, Ritual and Cult, pp.179-191; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 371-373.

⁴⁶ Pardee (cf. Frankfurter) defines it as a historiola, 'a text that links myth with magic' (Ritual and Cult, p. 167). KTU 1.114; 1.124 and 1.100 are also of the same kind.

⁴⁷ There are other differences too, for example Šapš here is more than a messenger, and she plays the main role. Also the serpent's venom is being gathered by the deities and not diluted. These differences however are not relevant for our purposes.

⁴⁸ KTU, pp. 116-117; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 520- 531; Ritual and Cult, pp. 19-21; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 60-61; 172-76.

⁴⁹ For discussion see Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 522-530; Ritual and Cult, p. 20.

Yam, Yarih, Kotar, Pidray, Anat Hablay, and others, all chthonic or infernal deities, or else connected to the night, earth and its products.⁵⁰

10. KTU 1.103 + KTU 1.145 (RS 24.247⁺)⁵¹ I.40

This text attests to the use of teratomancy, i.e. the interpretation of the monstrous forms of animal and human newborns.⁵² The various monstrous births foretell disasters that are to befall the land or the king (most lines), as well as good news such as the king shall make peace with the enemy (l. 54); alternatively he shall destroy the enemy/enemy's land (37; 58; 59).⁵³ The disasters that can strike are: enemy attack, famine, the land being destroyed or the king's succession being under threat, his descendants being destroyed. L.40 relates that if there is a contraction in the foetus' hoof, the lord (king?) shall be attacked by (his?) or he shall confront the guard ('hurādu –troops'), and his descendants shall be devoured ('consumed')⁵⁴ by Reshef.⁵⁵

11. KTU 105 (RS 24.249)⁵⁶

In this royal funerary ritual three different manifestations of Reshef appear, ršp mhbni, ršp mlk, and ršp bbt. Del Olmo refers to Dietrich – Loretz who regard mhbni, mlk and bbt as 'lexemes denoting place connected with the god Rašpu.'⁵⁷ However, Pardee warns against 'automatically' considering the second element of a composite ⁵⁰ Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 530.

⁵¹ KTU, pp. 117-120; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp.353-358; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 532-564; Ritual and Cult, pp. 135-140. KTU as well as del Olmo and Pardee read ršp without hesitation in l. 40, whereas Dietrich and Loretz are not so sure. See comment on l. 40 in Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 544.

⁵² Teratomancy was already in use in the Old Babylonian period. On Mesopotamian practice see for example M. Stol, Birth in Babylonia and the Bible: Its Mediterranean Setting (Groningen: Styx, 2000), pp. 158-170.

⁵³ In Mesopotamia also the birth of 'monstrous' i.e. malformed babies (animal or human) signalled bad things to come. Therefore they had a ritual in which the sun god Šamaš and the river god were invoked, to rid the person affected of the forecasted evil. See Stol, pp. 165-167.

⁵⁴ Pardee, Ritual and Cult, p. 140.

⁵⁵ Del Olmo and Pardee both rightly take ršp as the subject of the verb ykly. See Canaanite Religion, p. 356 n. 76 and Pardee's comments on l. 39-40 in Textes Rituels, p. 558 and notes 237-239.

⁵⁶ KTU pp. 121-122; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 58-59, 246-247; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 574 –587; Ritual and Cult, pp. 41-43.

⁵⁷ Canaanite Religion, p. 250 n. 102.

J. Blair Appendix: Reshef in the Ritual Texts

divine name as a toponym. As with ršp šbi, the second element might be an epithet.⁵⁸ In fact the geographical interpretation must remain doubtful because of lack of attestation of the element mhbn in other contemporary texts.⁵⁹

Similarly to mhbn, it is impossible to determine whether the element mlk refers to Reshef's royal status or if it identifies him with the deity mlk, or is one of his local manifestations.⁶⁰

Pardee rightly argues that the best explanation of Reshef Bibitta is that it is a theophoric name + a toponym, Bibitta being Reshef's Anatolian seat.⁶¹

12. KTU 1.106 (RS 24.250)⁶²

There is no agreement regarding the structure of this text. It is possible that it forms the second part of a larger text, a series of rites covering a two month period,⁶³ but also that it is a ritual preserved in whole but missing the usual title which would indicate the month to which the ritual is prescribed.⁶⁴

As mentioned earlier, some believe that KTU 1.106 is referred to in KTU 1.91, and the ršpm there is taken to point to ršp h.gb and ršp mhbn in the present text.

However, this is unlikely.

⁵⁸ See above. There are also two Arabic roots that could explain the second element in the composite name ršp mhbn; these are either \sqrt{whb} , 'to give, to be generous', and 'powerful, mighty', or \sqrt{hwb} , meaning 'dreaded, feared, respected'. (See Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 580 n. 20 – 22) However, we have to be cautious in relying too much on etymological explanations.

⁵⁹ Pardee points out that there is no proof of a link between Reshef and the town Mu-ba-a-an in Mari, referred to by Lipinski. See Textes Rituels, pp. 580-581 and n. 23.

⁶⁰ In agreement with Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 582.

⁶¹ Textes Rituels, p. 586 and n. 66 on that page cf. KTU 1.100. See also M. L. Barré, 'LAMMA and Rešep at Ugarit: The Hittite Connection', JAOS 98 (1978), 465-467, esp. p. 467 n. 32.

⁶² KTU p. 122; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 591-592; Ritual and Cult, pp. 53-54; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 219-221.

⁶³ Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 591-592; Ritual and Cult, p. 53.

⁶⁴ Del Olmo sees the text as a royal funerary ritual of the month of Gannu. For him line 18 indicates what the heading should have been (Canaanite Religion, p. 219). Pardee however, disagrees regarding the funerary nature of the text. While for del Olmo two things, i.e. the presence of yd 'mausoleum' in l. 17, and of the infernal deities, the ilm arš in l. 30 indicate that the text is a funerary ritual, Pardee argues that both these arguments are unsatisfactory. The first because of semantic, and the second because of epigraphic reasons. Further he argues that we should examine whether other elements of the text would support del Olmo's interpretation. The presence of Reshef, Inasu Ilima and Arsay, chthonic deities does not necessarily indicate a mortuary/funerary character as these are present in other, non-funerary texts as well. (Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 500-501)

J. Blair Appendix: Reshef in the Ritual Texts

Whereas in KTU 1.90 where ršp h.gb also occurs, del Olmo suggested a novel interpretation of h.gb as a type of offering, here he takes it as an epithet of Reshef and translates ršp h.gb as ‘Rašpu (of the) locust’.⁶⁵

On ršp mhbn see comments on the previous text (KTU 105 above).

13. KTU 108 (RS 24.252)⁶⁶

Several deities are invited to participate in a feast/ drinking. Several of them are described in more detail, e.g. lines 6-10 address Anat thus:

And may Anat the powerful drink,
the mistress of kingship,
the mistress of dominion,
the mistress of high heavens,
the mistress of the earth.
And may Anat fly,
may the kite soar in the high heavens,
who ate the calf of El,
drinking [] from the horn.⁶⁷

Unfortunately most of lines 14 and 15 are missing thus we do not have anything on Reshef apart from his name.

14. KTU 1.109 (RS 24.253)⁶⁸ l: 22

The text seems to be a ‘sacrificial new-moon ritual’ which apparently took place partly in the royal palace and partly in the temple of Baal of Ugarit.⁶⁹ Baal seems to be the dominant deity in the text under various manifestations. Reshef appears in l. 22 as the recipient of a ram as a peace offering. He is accompanied by the deities Ilib, Dagon, The Helper Deities of Baal, Baal and Anat (l. 19-23).

⁶⁵ Canaanite Religion, p. 231.

⁶⁶ KTU, pp. 124- 126. On the interpretation and translation of this text see de Moor, ARTU, pp. 187-90; Wyatt, RTU, pp. 395-398; Pardee, Ritual and Cult, pp. 192-195. The translations/interpretations of Wyatt and Pardee are similar and quite different from that of de Moor.

⁶⁷ Wyatt, RTU, pp. 396-397.

⁶⁸ KTU p. 126; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp.273-275; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 601-614; Ritual and Cult, pp. 26-31. The text is related to KTU 1.30 and KTU 1.130.

⁶⁹ Del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 272; Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 614.

15. KTU 1.123 (RS 24.271)⁷⁰

Whether this is a prayer or not cannot be said for certain.⁷¹ šlm in lines 1-3 and 28-33 is taken as an imperative, therefore all the deities are regarded as objects of the same request for blessing. Underlying we have a deity list which is interesting in that almost all the gods are mentioned as pairs (double deities?). In l. 31' we have ršp, followed by inš ilm, as in other instances.⁷²

16. KTU 1.126 (RS 24.276)⁷³

Here we have two occurrences of Reshef in a sacrificial ritual text which is so badly damaged that no structural analysis of it is possible. In l. 3' Reshef receives a cow (gdlt) as sacrifice, and in l. 5' the text is broken. Only the first letter a' is visible, and Pardee remarks that no other instances are known where Reshef receives a sacrifice beginning with this letter.⁷⁴ There are however two instances of Reshef HGB receiving a snout and a neck (ap w npš),⁷⁵ and Reshef MLK receiving once a bull and a ram (alp w š),⁷⁶ but as Pardee points out we cannot say whether one of these sacrifices would be attributed here to Reshef or whether the sacrifice is actually intended for another deity.⁷⁷

⁷⁰ KTU pp. 135-136; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 63-65; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 691-706; Ritual and Cult, pp. 150-153.

⁷¹ Cf. Pardee, Ritual and Cult, p. 150. According to KTU it is a prayer, a liturgy or a scribal exercise (p. 135). Del Olmo lists it under the category of 'prayer-magic' (Canaanite Religion, p. 63).

⁷² Pardee notes: 'Though Rasap is the god of the underworld and the Inasu-Ilima plausibly one of the principal components of the underworld population, the two are not associated as often as one might expect: both entities appear rather often in the ritual texts, but they are placed in immediate proximity only three other times and each time a particular manifestation of Rasap is named.' (Ritual and Cult, p. 153 n. 9) In KTU 1.105:25'-26' it is Rasap-Bibitta, in KTU 1.106:1-2 and 1.134:9'-10' it is Rasap-Hagab. Some scholars identify the inš ilm and ršp, the former being a manifestation of ršp. See Textes Rituels, p. 705 and n. 90 for references. Niehr sees this text as a reference to Reshef's apotropaic character; he is invoked along with other deities to give his blessing (p. 88).

⁷³ KTU pp. 136-137; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, p. 24; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 707-711; Ritual and Cult, pp. 39-40.

⁷⁴ Textes Rituels, p. 708, contra KTU which restores a[lp].

⁷⁵ KTU 1.90 and 1.168.

⁷⁶ KTU 1.105.

⁷⁷ Textes Rituels, p. 710.

17. KTU 1.165 (RIH 77/4)⁷⁸ + KTU 6.62 (RS 25.318)⁷⁹

In the first text we have one occurrence of ršp in l. 2 and one of ršp gn in l. 3, which also occurs in the second text. KTU 1.165 is a short and fragmentary text and so we cannot say much about it. Pardee conjectures that here we might have an exit of ršp gn at night from the royal palace.⁸⁰ KTU 6.62 is a short inscription on a vessel (a terracotta lion head) which identifies it as dedicated to the deity ršp gn.⁸¹

18. KTU 1.171 (RIH 78/16)⁸²

Ršp bbt occurs in l. 3 of this royal sacrificial ritual as the recipient of a ram possibly as a šlmm sacrifice.⁸³ The only other known deities in the text are the inš ilm (receiving two birds as a šrp? sacrifice), the text is broken thus other divinities remain unknown. Pardee remarks that it has been suggested to restore l. 1 as:

{[k y'rb ršp mh]bn}

which is the entry formula of one of Reshef's manifestations.⁸⁴ While it is possible, it is not necessarily the correct restoration.

19. KTU 4. 728 (RS 24.292)⁸⁵

The element ršp occurs in l. 8 as part of a theophoric name, tgršp . b[n]. Pardee and Bordreuil read aḥršp in l.8.

⁷⁸ KTU p. 153; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 842-843; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, pp. 261; 318; 323.

⁷⁹ KTU p. 510; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 813-815; Ritual and Cult, p. 126.

⁸⁰ Textes Rituels, p. 843. Pardee takes ršp gn to be the subject of the verb yšan.

⁸¹ Pardee, Textes Rituels and Ritual and Cult, 'Rasap-Guni'; Fulco, 'Rešep of the garden'. He mentions another text, KTU 4.219 (UT 1088) in which in l. 3 we have a [l . b]t . ršp . gn, and he adds: 'However one interprets gn, the context surely implies that Rešep had a shrine or temple at Ugarit.' (pp. 43-44) Indeed, that is a reasonable conclusion if the restoration is accepted. Niehr sees the element gn as referring to the royal nekropolis (p. 88).

⁸² KTU p. 157; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 872-874; del Olmo, Canaanite Religion, argues that this is a fragmentary sacrificial ritual that cannot be reconstructed; its textual information about deities and sacrifices are known from other texts (p. 322).

⁸³ Lines 6 and 7 suggest a chronological structure for this ritual.

⁸⁴ E.g. KTU 1.91 l. 11: k . t'rbn . ršpm . bt . mlk . See Pardee, Textes Rituels, p. 874.

⁸⁵ KTU p. 465; Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 749-750. This is an administrative text that contains a list of persons who were paying tax in the form of oil to the cult of Baal HLB.

20. KTU 1.82 (RS 15.134)⁸⁶ I:3

Reshef appears in l. 3 of this text,

[]bt. b'l . hz . ršp. bn . km . yr. klyth . wlbh

This is a difficult text that has not received much attention. De Moor and Spronk argue that it is ‘an incantation for a handicapped girl’;⁸⁷ Caquot agrees with this interpretation though he also points to its mythological character.⁸⁸ There is disagreement regarding the translation of line 3. De Moor followed by Caquot take b'l as the subject and hz . ršp as the object of the verb yr, translating it,

[May] Ba‘lu [st]op the arrows of Rashpu!⁸⁹ or

Baal gathered the arrows of Reshef...⁹⁰

Others, like Day and Fulco take b'l . hz . ršp as one expression, ‘the archer Reshef’ or ‘the lord of the arrows, Reshef’.⁹¹

The rest of the line seems to confirm Reshef’s association with illness.

*Pay attention when he (Rashpu) shoots at her kidneys and her heart!*⁹² Or,

*He aimed as an archer at his kidneys and his heart.*⁹³

De Moor thinks that ‘The “arrows” of Rashpu are the plagues and diseases this evil god is sending among mankind.’⁹⁴ However, the claim that Reshef was an evil deity ⁸⁶ See De Moor, ARTU, p. 176; J. C. de Moor and K. Spronk, ‘More on demons in Ugarit’, UF 16 (1984), 237-250; A. Caquot, ‘Un Recueil Ougaritique de Formules Magiques: KTU 1.82’, SEL 5 (1988), 31-43; Fulco, pp. 49-51. Pardee does not discuss the text. The text was first partially translated by P. J. van Zijl, ‘Translation and Discussion of Text 1001:1-2 (RŠ 15.134:1-2)’ and ‘Translation and Discussion of Text 1001:3-5a (RŠ 15.134:3-5a)’, JNSWL 2 (1972), 74-85, and 3 (1974), 85-93.

⁸⁷ P. 238.

⁸⁸ L. 1-2 refer to Baal’s struggle with the dragon. ‘Recueil’, p. 31; also J. Day, ‘New Light on the Mythological Background of the Allusion to Resheph in Habakkuk III 5’, VT 29 (1979), 353-354, esp. pp. 353-354.

⁸⁹ De Moor and Spronk, p. 239.

⁹⁰ Caquot, ‘Recueil’, p. 34. So also Niehr, p. 97.

⁹¹ Day, ‘New Light’, p. 354; Fulco, p. 51.

⁹² De Moor and Spronk, p. 239; ARTU, p. 176.

⁹³ Caquot, ‘Recueil’, p. 34. See also n. 5 on p. 355 in Day, ‘New Light’ for a (very) brief discussion of van Zijl’s interpretation of this line. Day is right that van Zijl’s translation involves a ‘rather speculative restoration of the text.’

⁹⁴P. 239; ARTU, p. 176 n. 2.

is not supported by this text or by the other available evidence. In fact, that Reshef featured as a theophoric element in personal names at Ugarit points to the opposite.⁹⁵ He had both a positive and a negative aspect (as did all other gods); he could bring on as well as protect from disease.

Summary

The cultic-ritual texts provide the following information regarding the character of Reshef in Ugarit.

Reshef was a chthonic deity associated with plague and disease. He seems to have played an important role in the royal and funerary cult. Perhaps his status as a dynastic god was due to his association with war, and as such he was a patron god of the kings. He received the šrp and šlmm sacrifices, but whether this was linked to his ‘infernal character’ or not is questionable.⁹⁶

In some texts Reshef appears with Anat. Some scholars think this more significant than others. Thus while Fulco writes that Reshef is: ‘frequently listed together stereotypically with Anat in various texts that involve groupings of gods’,⁹⁷ Pardee points out that in fact there are only a handful of instances where they occur together, and even then this is because they both represent the so-called ‘third rank’ of the Ugaritic pantheon, i.e. the gods who do not belong to El’s immediate family circle.⁹⁸

Their common trait is perhaps their association with war.

In the ritual texts Reshef appears in various manifestations, these forms might be his epithets and some might refer to his cult centres. He also appears in plural form, as ršpm, and this perhaps reflects his multiple manifestations.

⁹⁵ Niehr (p. 87) writes: ‘Daneben ist nicht zu übersehen, dass, wie schon in Ebla und in einigen Städten im Euphratgebiet, auch in Ugarit der Gott Rašpu als theophores Element in Personnamen begegnet. Dies deutet in Ugarit auf einen positiven Aspekt des Gottes Rašpu, der nicht nur Krankheit und Tod bringt, sondern auch vor der Krankheit schützen kann, so dass den Gott ein apotropäisches Element zukommt, weshalb er dem Kirtu-Epos zufolge auch zum Hochzeitsmahl eingeladen wird.’ For Reshef featuring in personal names see for ex. Fulco, pp. 34-36, and further F. Vattioni, Il dio Resheph, AION 15 (1965), 39-74; F. Gröndahl, Die Personennamen der Texte aus Ugarit, Studia Pohl, 1 (Roma: Typis Pontificiae Universitatis Gregorianae, 1967).

⁹⁶ See discussion in Pardee, Textes Rituels, pp. 41-50.

⁹⁷ P. 40.

⁹⁸ Textes Rituels, pp. 52-53.

J. Blair Appendix: Reshef in the Ritual Texts

One of the most valuable sources of information is RS 20.024, the Akkadian translation of the deity list which identifies Reshef with Nergal. This is where we can gather the most information regarding the god's character, and which confirms his association with the underworld, epidemics and war. All these characteristics can give him both a positive and a negative aspect; he can be both the cause of illness and invoked to protect against; he can cause destruction as a war god as well as be the protector of his worshippers; he can be the god of the underworld but play an important role as such in the royal funerary cult. The large number of personal names containing his name as a theophoric element would tilt the balance towards the positive aspect. In any case there is nothing in Ugarit that would suggest a demonic character to Reshef.⁹⁹

⁹⁹ So also Niehr, pp. 88-89.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Abrams, M. H. 'New Criticism' in A Glossary of Literary Terms, 7th edn (Fort Worth: Harcourt Brace College Publishers, 1999), pp. 180-182
- Albright, W. F. 'An Aramean Magical Text in Hebrew From the Seventh century B.C.', BASOR 76 (1939), 5-11
- Alexander, Ph. S. 'Wrestling Against Wickedness in High Places: Magic in the Worldview of the Qumran Community', in The Scrolls and the Scriptures, Qumran Fifty Years After, ed. by S. E. Porter and C. A. Evans (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997), pp. 318- 337
- _____ 'The demonology of the Dead Sea scrolls', in The Dead Sea scrolls after fifty years : A Comprehensive Assessment, ed. by P. W. Flint and J. C. Vanderkam (Leiden: Brill, 1999), II, pp.332-353
- Allen, L. C. Psalms 101 – 150, WBC 21, (Waco: Word Books, 1983)
- _____ Ezekiel 1-19, WBC 28 (Dallas: Word Books, 1994)
- _____ Ezekiel 20-48, WBC 29 (Dallas: Word Books, 1990)
- Alonso Schökel, L. A Manual of Hebrew Poetics (Roma: Editrice Pontificio Instituto Biblico, 2000)
- Alter, R. The Art of Biblical Narrative (New York: Basic Books, 1981)
- Andersen, F. I. Habakkuk: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB 25 (New York: Doubleday, 2001)
- Andersen, F. I. and D.N. Freedman Hosea: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1980)
- _____ Amos: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1989)
- Anderson, A. A. The Book of Psalms (London: Marshall, Morgan and Scott, 1972), II
- _____ 2 Samuel, WBC 11 (Dallas: Word Books, 1989)
- Ashley, T. R. The Book of Numbers (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993)
- Barr, J. The Semantics of Biblical Language (London: Oxford University Press, 1961)
- Barré, M. L. 'LAMMA and Rešep at Ugarit: The Hittite Connection', JAOS 98 (1978), 465-467
- Barstad, H. M. The Religious Polemics of Amos, VTSuppl 34 (Leiden: Brill, 1984)
- _____ 'Sheol', DDD, pp.768-77
- _____ 'Comparare necesse est? Ancient Israelite and Ancient Near Eastern Prophecy in a Comparative Perspective' in Prophecy in Its Ancient Near Eastern Context: Mesopotamian, Biblical, and Arabian Perspectives, ed. by

- M. Nissinen, SBL Symposium no.13 (Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2000), pp. 1-11
- _____ 'Jeremiah as Text. Some Reflections on Genre and Reality in Old Testament prophetic Research', in Historie og konstruktion: Festschrift til Niels Peter Lemche i anledning af 60 års fødselsdagen den 6. September 2005, ed. by M. Müller and T. L. Thompson (København: Museum Tusulanums Forlag, 2005), pp. 11-18
- Barton, G. A. and J. Hastings (eds.) Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1911), IV
- Barton, J. Isaiah 1-39, OT Guides (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995)
- _____ Reading the OT: Method in Biblical Study, 2nd edn (London: Darton, Longman and Todd, 2006)
- Baumgarten, J. M. 'On the Nature of the Seductress in 4Q184', Revue de Qumran 15 (1991-92), 133-143
- _____ 'The seductress of Qumran', Bible Review 17 no. 5 (2001), 21-23; 42
- Beal, T. K., K. A. Keefer and T. Linafelt 'Literary and Structuralist/Postmodernist Approaches Methods', in Methods of Biblical Interpretation ed. by J. H. Hayes (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 2004), pp. 159-167
- Bellinger Jr., W. H. Leviticus and Numbers, New International Biblical Commentary (Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 2001)
- Bergey, R. 'The Song of Moses (Deuteronomy 32.1-43) and Isaianic Prophecies: A Case of Early Intertextuality?' JSOT 28 (2003), 33-54
- Berlin, A. Poetics and Interpretation of Biblical Narrative, Bible and Literature 9 (Sheffield: Almond Press, 1983)
- Betz, H. D. 'Jewish magic in the Greek magical papyri (PGM VII 260-71)', in Envisioning Magic, ed. by Schafer, Kippenberg (Leiden: Brill, 1997), pp. 45-63
- Biddle, A. W. and T. Fulwiler, Reading, Writing, and the Study of Literature (New York: Random House, 1989)
- Biggs, Ch. R. The Book of Ezekiel (London: Epworth Press, 1996)
- Black, J. and A. Green Gods, Demons and Symbols of Ancient Mesopotamia (GDS): An Illustrated Dictionary (London: British Museum Press, 1992)
- Block, D. I. The Book of Ezekiel: Chapters 25-48 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998)
- Bodi, D. The Book of Ezekiel and the Poem of Erra, OBO 104 (Freiburg: Universitätsverlag, 1991)

- Braude, W. G. The Midrash on Psalms, 2 vols. (New Haven: Yale, 1959), II
- Braun, R. 1 Chronicles, WBC 14 (Waco: Word Books, 1986)
- Brenner, A. The Song of Songs, OT Guides (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1989)
- Bright, J. Jeremiah: Introduction, Translation, and Notes, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965)
- Bronznik, N. 'The Alphabet of Ben Sira' in Rabbinic Fantasies: Imaginative Narratives from Classical Hebrew Literature, ed. by D. Stern and M.J. Mirsky, Yale Judaica series 29 (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1990), pp. 167-202
- Brookes, I. (ed. in chief) Chambers Dictionary (Edinburgh: Chambers Harrop Publ., 2003)
- Broyles, C. C. Psalms, New International Biblical Commentary (Peabody: Hendrickson Publishers, 1999)
- Brueggemann, W. First and Second Samuel, Interpretation: A Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1990)
 _____ Isaiah 1-39 (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1998)
- Budd, Ph. Numbers, WBC 5 (Waco: Word Books, 1984)
- Burkert, W. 'Lamashtu, Lamia and Gorgo' in The Orientalizing Revolution: Near Eastern Influence on Greek Culture in the Early Archaic Age, transl. by M.E. Pinder and W. Burkert, (Cambridge, Ma: Harvard University Press, 1992), pp. 82-87
- Burrelli Jr., R. J. 'A Study of Psalm 91 with Special Reference to the Theory that It Was Intended as a Protection Against Demons and Magic' (unpublished doctoral thesis, University of Cambridge, 1994)
- Caird, G. B. The Language and Imagery of the Bible (London: Duckworth, 1980)
- Caquot, A. 'Sur Quelques Démons de L' Ancien Testament (Reshep, Qeteb, Deber)', Semitica 6 (1956), 53- 68
 _____ 'Un Recueil Ougaritique de Formules Magiques: KTU 1.82', SEL 5 (1988), 31-43
- Carmichael, C. 'The Origin of the Scapegoat Ritual', VT 50/2 (2000), 167-182
- Carroll, R. P. Jeremiah: A Commentary (Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1986)
- Cassuto, U. A Commentary on the Book of Exodus, transl. by I. Abrahams (Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 1967)

- Chatman, S. Story and Discourse: Narrative Structure in Fiction and Film, (Ithaca and London: Cornell University Press, 1978)
- Cheyne, T. K. ‘The Date and Origin of the Ritual of the “Scapegoat”’, ZAW 15 (1895), 153-156
- Childs, B. S. Isaiah (Louisville: John Knox Press, 2001)
- Christensen, D. L. Deuteronomy 21:10-34:12, WBC 6B (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 2002)
- Clements, R. E. Exodus, Cambridge Bible Commentary (Cambridge: University Press, 1972)
 _____ Isaiah 1-39, New Century Bible Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1980)
 _____ Jeremiah, Interpretation: Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1988)
 _____ Deuteronomy (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 1989)
 _____ Ezekiel (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1996)
- Clines, D. J. A. Job 1-20, WBC 17 (Dallas: Word Books, 1989)
- Cogan, M. 1 Kings, AB (New York: Doubleday, 2001)
- Cogan, M. and H. Tadmor II Kings: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1988)
- Conrad, D. ‘Der Gott Reschef’, ZAW 83, (1971), 157-183
- Cornelius, I. The Iconography of the Canaanite Gods Reshef and Ba‘al. Late Bronze and Iron Age I Periods (1500-1000 BCE), OBO 140 (Freibourg: University Press, 1994)
 _____ ‘The Iconography of the Canaanite Gods Reshef and Baal: A Rejoinder’, JNWSL 24 (1998), 167-177
- Craigie, P. C. The Book of Deuteronomy, The New International Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976)
 _____ Ugarit and the Old Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983)
 _____ Psalms 1 – 50, WBC 19 (Waco: Word Books, 1983)
 _____ Ezekiel, Daily Study Bible OT (Edinburgh: St. Andrews Press, 1983)
 _____ The Twelve Prophets, Daily Study Bible OT (Edinburgh: St. Andrews Press, 1985), II
- Craigie, P.C, P. H. Kelley and J. F. Drinkard, Jr. Jeremiah 1-25, WBC 26 (Dallas: Word Books, 1991)
- Curtis, A. Psalms, Epworth Commentaries (Peterborough: Epworth Press, 2004)
- Dahood, M. ‘Hebrew – Ugaritic Lexicography’, Bib 45 (1964), 393-412
 _____ Psalms I, 1-50, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965)

- _____ Psalms II, 51-100, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1968)
- _____ Ras Shamra Parallels: The Texts from Ugarit and the Hebrew Bible AnOr 51 (Roma: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1981)
- Davidson, R. The Vitality of Worship: A Commentary on the Book of Psalms (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998)
- Davies, G. I. Hosea, The New Century Bible Commentaries (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1992)
- Day, J. 'New Light on the Mythological Background of the Allusion to Resheph in Habakkuk III 5', VT 29 (1979), 353-354
- _____ Yahweh and the Gods and Goddesses of Canaan, JSOTSuppl 265 (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002)
- Day, P. L. An Adversary in Heaven: Satan in the Hebrew Bible, Harvard Semitic Monographs (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988)
- Delcor, M. 'Le mythe de la chute des anges et de l'origine des géants comme explication du mal dans le monde dans l'apocalyptique juive: Histoire des traditions', RHR 190 (1976), 3- 53
- Dhorme, E. A Commentary on the Book of Job, transl. by H. H. Rowley (London: Thomas Nelson & Sons Ltd., 1967)
- Dietrich, M., Loretz, O. and Sanmartin, J. The Cuneiform Alphabetic Texts from Ugarit, Ras Ibn Hani and other Places (KTU), 2nd enlarged edn (Münster: Ugarit – Verlag, 1995)
- Diez Macho, A. Neofiti ITargum Palestinense Ms de la Biblioteca Vaticana Tomo 1: Genesis, Tomo 3: Levitico, (Madrid: CSIC, 1968-71)
- _____ Neofiti ITargum Palestinense Ms de la Biblioteca Vaticana (Madrid: CSIC, 1978)
- Dillard, R. B. 2 Chronicles, WBC 15 (Waco: Word Books, 1987)
- Dixon, D. M. 'A Note on Some Scavengers of Ancient Egypt', World Archaeology 21 no. 2 (1989), 193-197
- Douglas, M. Leviticus as Literature (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999)
- _____ 'The Go-Away Goat' pp.121- 41, in R. Rendtorff, R. et. al. eds. The Book of Leviticus, Composition and Reception (Leiden: Brill, 2003)
- Driver, G. R. 'Birds in the Old Testament: I. Birds in Law', PEQ 87 (1955), 5-20
- _____ 'Birds in the Old Testament: II Birds in Life', PEQ 87 (1955), 129-140
- _____ 'Three Technical Terms in the Pentateuch', JSS 1 (1956), 97- 105
- _____ 'Lilith: Isa 34:14', PEQ 91, (1959), 55-57
- Driver, S. R. Notes on the Hebrew Text and the Topography of the Books of Samuel (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2nd rev. enlarged edn, 1913)

- Durham, J. I. Exodus, WBC 3 (Waco: Word Books, 1987)
- Eaton, J. H. ‘The Origin and Meaning of Habakkuk 3’, ZAW 76 (1964), 144-171
 _____ Psalms: Introduction and Commentary (London: SCM Press, 1967)
 _____ Job (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1985), pp. 2-65
- Emerton, J.A. ‘“The High Places of the Gates” in 2 Kings 23:8’, VT 44 (1994), 455-467
- Epstein, I. (ed.) The Babylonian Talmud: Seder Mo‘ed (London: Soncino Press, 1938)
- Eszenyei Széles, M. Wrath and Mercy: A Commentary on the Books of Habakkuk and Zephaniah, International Theological Commentary (Edinburgh: Handsel, 1987)
- Fabry, H. J. ‘“Satan” – Begriff und Wirklichkeit: Untersuchungen zur Dämonologie der alttestamentlichen Weisheitsliteratur’, in Die Dämonen/ Demons: The Demonology of Israelite-Jewish and Early Christian Literature in Context of their Environment, ed. by A. Lange, H. Lichtenberger and K. F. D. Römheld (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003), pp. 269-291
- Fensham, Ch. F. ‘The Treaty between Israel and the Gibeonites’, The Biblical Archaeologist 27 (1964), 96-100
- Fisher, L. R et al., eds. Ras Shamra parallels: The texts from Ugarit and the Hebrew Bible, 2 vols (Roma: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1972-7)
- Fokkelman, J. P. Reading Biblical Narrative: An Introductory Guide, trans. by I. Smit (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1999)
 _____ Reading Biblical Poetry: An Introductory Guide, trans. by I. Smit (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2001)
- Fretheim, T. E. Exodus, Interpretation: A Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1991)
- Fulco, W. J. The Canaanite God Rešep, AOS (New Haven: American Oriental Society, 1976)
- Gaines, J. Howe ‘Lilith: seductress, heroine or murderer?’, Bible Review 17 no. 5, (2001), 12-20; 43-44
- Gaster, M. ‘Two Thousand Years of a Charm Against the Child-Stealing Witch’, Folklore 11 (1900), 129-162
- Gaster, T. H. ‘A Canaanite Magical Text’, Or 11 (1942), 41-79
 _____ ‘The Magical Inscription from Arslan Tash’, JNES 6 (1947), 186-188
 _____ ‘Demon, Demonology’, in IDB, I, pp. 817-827 _____ Myth, Legend, and Custom in the Old Testament (New York: Harper & Row

- Publishers, 1969)
- Gerstenberger, E. S. Leviticus: A Commentary, transl. by D. W. Stott, OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1996)
- Gibson, J. C. L. Job (Edinburgh: The Saint Andrew Press, 1985)
- Gileadi, A. The Literary Message of Isaiah (New York: Hebraeus Press, 1994)
- Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews, transl. by P. Radin, 7 vols (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1911), III
- Plaskow Goldenberg, J. 'Epilogue: The Coming Of Lilith', in Religion and Sexism: Images of Woman in the Jewish and Christian Traditions, ed. by R. Radford Ruether (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1974), pp. 341-343
- Goldingay, J. Isaiah, New International Biblical Commentary (USA: Hendrickson; Carlisle: Paternoster Press, 2001)
- Gordis, R. The Song of Songs and Lamentations: A Study, Modern Translation and Commentary, revised and augmented ed. (New York: KTAV Publishing House, INC, 1974)
 _____ The Book of Job: Commentary, New Translation and Special Studies, (New York: The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1978)
- Gorman, F. H. Jr The Ideology of Ritual. Space, Time and Status in the Priestly Theology, JSOTSuppl 91 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1990)
- Grabbe, L. L. 'The Scapegoat Tradition: A Study in Early Jewish Interpretation', JSJ 18/2 (1987), 152-167
 _____ Leviticus, OT Guides (Sheffield: JSOT, 1993)
- Gray, J. I & II Kings, OT Library, 2nd rev. edn (London: SCM Press, 1970)
- Greenberg, M. Ezekiel 1-20, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1983)
 _____ Ezekiel 21-37, AB 22A (New York: Doubleday, 1997)
- Grossfeld, B. The Targum Onqelos to Leviticus and The Targum Onqelos to Numbers: Translated with Apparatus and Notes, The Aramaic Bible 8, (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1987)
 _____ The Targum Onqelos to Deuteronomy: Translated with Apparatus and Notes, The Aramaic Bible 9 (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1988)
- Grödhahl, F. Die Personennamen der Texts aus Ugarit, Studia Pohl 1 (Roma: Typis Pontificiae Universitatis Gregoriana, 1967).
- Hallo, W. H. (gen. ed.) The Context of Scripture, Canonical Compositions from the Biblical World, 2 vols (Leiden: Brill, 1997), I
- Handy, L. K. 'Resheph' in ABD, V, pp. 678-679

- Hanson, P. D. 'Rebellion in Heaven, Azazel, and Euhemeristic Heroes in 1 Enoch 6-11', JBL 96/2 (1976), 195-233
- Hartley, J. E. The Book of Job (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988)
 _____ Leviticus, WBC 4 (Dallas: Word Books, 1992)
- Hayes, J. H. Amos, The Eighth Century Prophet (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1998)
- Heltzer, M. The Rural Community in Ancient Ugarit (Wiesbaden: Dr Ludwig Reichert Verlag, 1976)
- Hertzberg, H. W. 1 and 2 Samuel: A Commentary, transl. by J. S. Bowden, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1964)
- Hiebert, T. God of My Victory: The Ancient Hymn in Habakkuk 3, HSM 38 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1986)
- Hillers, D. R. 'Demons, Demonology', in *EncJud*¹, V, pp.1521-1526
- Hirschberg, H. H. 'Some Additional Arabic Etymologies in Old Testament Lexicography', VT 11 (1961), 373-385
- Hobbs, T. R. 2 Kings, WBC 13 (Waco: Word Books, 1985)
- Holladay, W. L. 'Prototype and Copies: A New Approach to the Poetry-Prose Problem in the Book of Jeremiah', JBL 79 no. 4 (1960), 351-367
 _____ Jeremiah 1: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Jeremiah Chapters 1-25, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1986)
 _____ Jeremiah 2: A Commentary of the Prophet Jeremiah Chapters 26-52, Hermeneia (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1989)
- Hossfeld, F. L. and E. Zenger Psalms 2: A Commentary on Psalms 51-100, Hermeneia trans. by L.M. Maloney (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress Press, 2005)
- House, P. 1, 2 Kings, The New American Commentary 8 (Nashville: Broadman & Holman, 1995)
- Houtman, C. Exodus, transl. by J. Rebel and S. Woudstra, 3 vols (Kampen: KOK Publishing House, 1993), I
- Hurwitz, S. Lilith, die erste Eva: Eine Studie über dunkle Aspekte der Weiblichkeit (Zurich: Daimon Verlag, 1980)
- Hutter, M. 'Lilith', DDD, pp. 520-521
- Irwin, W. H. Isaiah 28-33: Translation with Philological Notes, Biblica et Orientalia 30 (Rome: Biblical Institute Press, 1977)

- Jacobsen, Th. The Treasures of Darkness. A History of Mesopotamian Religion (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1976)
 _____ 'Pictures and Pictorial Language (The Burney Relief)' in Figurative Language in the Ancient Near East ed. by M. Mindin et al. (London: Routledge Chapman and Hall, 1997), pp. 1-24
- Janowski, B. 'Azazel', DDD, pp. 128-131
- Japhet, S. 1 & 2 Chronicles: A Commentary, OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1993)
- Jastrow, M. 'T. Witton Davies on Magic, Divination and Demonology', The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, 15 no.3 (1899), 172-173
 _____ A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic Literature (Peabody: Hendrickson, 2005)
- Jenson, Ph. P. 'The Levitical Sacrificial System' in Sacrifice in the Bible, ed. by R. T. Beckwith and M. J. Selman (Carlisle: Paternoster Press; Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1995), pp. 25-40
- Jeremias, J. The Book of Amos: A Commentary, transl. by D. W. Stott, OT Library (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1998)
- Johnston, S. I. 'Defining the Dreadful: remarks on the Greek Child-Killing Demon', in Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, ed. by M. Meyer and P. Mirecki (Leiden: Brill, 2001), pp. 361-387
- Jung, Rabbi Dr L. The Babylonian Talmud: Seder Mo'ed, Yoma (London: The Soncino Press, 1938)
- Kaiser, O. Isaiah 13-39: A Commentary, trans. by R. A. Wilson (London: SCM Press, 1974)
- Karsten, R. The Origins of Religion (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1935)
- Keel, O. The Song of Songs: A Continental Commentary, trans. by F. J. Gaiser (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1994)
 _____ 'Schwache alttestamentliche Ansätze zur Konstruktion einer stark dualistisch getönten Welt', in Die Dämonen/ Demons: The Demonology of Israelite-Jewish and Early Christian Literature in Context of their Environment, ed. by A. Lange, H. Lichtenberger and K. F. D. Römheld (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003), pp. 211-236
- Keller, C. A. Nahoum, Habacuc, Sophonie (Paris: Delachaux et Niestlé, 1971)
- Keown, G. L., P. J. Scalise and T. G. Smothers Jeremiah 26-52, WBC 27 (Dallas: Word Books, 1995)

- Kiuchi, N. The Purification Offering in the Priestly Literature: Its Meaning and Function, JSOTSuppl 56 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1987)
- Klein, R. W. 1 Samuel, WBC 10 (Waco: Word Books, 1983)
- Knibb, M. A. (in consultation with E. Ullendorff) The Ethiopic Book of Enoch, Introduction, Translation and Commentary (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1978)
- Knoppers, G. N. 1 Chronicles 10-29, AB (New York: Doubleday, 2004)
- Kraeling, E. G. 'A Unique Babylonian Relief', BASOR 67 (1937), 16-18
- Kramer, S. N. Gilgames and the Huluppu-Tree: A reconstructed Sumerian Text, The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Assyriological Studies No. 10 (Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1938)
- _____ Sumerian Mythology: A Study of Spiritual and Literary Achievement in the Third Millennium B. C. (Philadelphia: The American Philosophical Society, 1944)
- _____ History Begins at Sumer (London: Thames & Hudson, 1958)
- _____ Cradle of Civilization (Amsterdam: Time-Life, 1969)
- Kuemmerlin-McLean, J. K. 'Demons: Old Testament', ABD, II, pp. 138-140
- Landy, F. Hosea (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995)
- Langdon, S. H. The Mythology of all Races: Semitic, Archaeological Institute of America, (Boston: Marshall Jones Company, 1931), V
- Langton, E. Essentials of Demonology: A Study of Jewish and Christian Doctrine Its Origin and Development (London: The Epworth Press, 1949)
- Lenormant, F. Chaldean Magic: Its Origin and Development, trans. with considerable additions by the author, by F. Lenormant (London: Samuel Bagster and Sons, 1877)
- Lesses, R. 'Exe(o)rcising power: women as sorceresses, exorcists, and demonesses in Babylonian Jewish society of late antiquity', JAAR 69 no. 2 (2001), 343-375
- Lewis, T. J. 'First-Born of Death', in DDD, pp.332-335
- Levine, B. A. In the Presence of the Lord (Leiden: Brill, 1976)
- _____ Leviticus, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1989)
- Long, B. O. 2 Kings, The Forms of the OT Literature 10 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991)
- Long, J. B. 'Demons: An Overview', EncRel², IV, pp. 282-288

- Lundbom, J. R. Jeremiah 1-20, AB 21A (New York: Doubleday, 1999)
 _____ Jeremiah 21-36, AB 21B (New York: Doubleday, 2004)
 _____ Jeremiah 37-52: A New Translation with Introduction, AB 21C (New York: Doubleday, 2004)
- Maag, V. 'Belija'al im Alten Testament', ThZ 21 (1965), 287-99
- Maarsingh, B. Numbers: A Practical Commentary, Text and Interpretation (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987)
- Macintosh, A. A. 'Psalm XCI 4 and the root סָהַר', VT 23 (1973), 56-62
- Margulis, B. 'The Psalm of Habakkuk: A Reconstruction and Interpretation', ZAW 82 (1970), 400-441
- Mayes, A. D. H. Deuteronomy, New Century Bible Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; 1979)
- Mays, J. L. Hosea: A Commentary (London: SCM Press, 1969)
 _____ Amos: A Commentary, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1969)
 _____ Psalms, Interpretation: A Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1994)
- Mauchline, J. (ed.) 1 and 2 Samuel, New Century Bible (London: Oliphants, 1971)
- McCarter, P. K. Jr. 1 Samuel, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1980)
 _____ 2 Samuel, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1984)
- McConville, J. G. Deuteronomy, Apollos OT Commentary 5 (Leicester: Apollos, InterVarsity Press, 2002)
- McKane, W. Jeremiah: A Critical and Exegetical Commentary: Introduction and Commentary on Jeremiah 1-25 (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1986), I
 _____ Jeremiah: A Critical and Exegetical Commentary: Jeremiah 26-42 (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1996), II
- McKeating, H. The Books of Amos, Hosea, and Micah (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1971)
 _____ Ezekiel, OT Guides (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993)
- McKenzie, S.L. 1-2 Chronicles, Abingdon OT Commentaries (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 2004)
- McLean, B. 'On the revision of scapegoat terminology', Numen 37 no. 2 (1990), 168-173(6)
- Meier, S. A. 'Destroyer', in DDD, pp. 240-244

- Meisner, B. Beiträge zum Assyrischen Wörterbuch vol 1 part I (Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1931)
- Merriam-Webster's Online Dictionary, www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/demon; www.yourdictionary.com/demon [accessed 2008-04-25]
- Meyers, C. 'The Roots of Restriction: Women in Early Israel', BA 41 no. 3 (1978), 91-103
 _____ Exodus, New Cambridge Bible Commentary (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005)
- Milgrom, J. 'Sacrifices and Offerings, OT' in Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, supplementary volume (IDBSuppl) (1976), pp. 763-771
 _____ 'Two Kinds of Hatta't', VT 26 (1976), 333-337
 _____ Studies in Cultic Theology and Terminology, SJLA 36 (Leiden: Brill, 1983)
 _____ Numbers, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1990)
 _____ Leviticus 1-16: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (New York: Doubleday, 1991)
 _____ Leviticus: A Book of Ritual and Ethics: A Continental Commentary (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2004)
- Milik, J. T. (ed.) The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumran Cave 4 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1976)
- Miller, P. D. Deuteronomy, Interpretation: A Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1990)
- Miscall, P. D. Isaiah 34-35: Nightmare/A Dream, JSOTSuppl 281 (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 1999)
 _____ Isaiah (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993)
- Montgomery, J. 'The Lilith Legend', The Museum Journal 4 (1913), 62-65
- Moor, J. C. De 'The Semitic Pantheon of Ugarit', UF 2 (1970), 187-228
 _____ The Seasonal Pattern in the Ugaritic Myth of Ba'lu: According to the Version of Ilmilku (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Verlag Butzon & Bercker Kevelaer, 1971)
 _____ 'An Incantation Against Evil Spirits', UF 12 (1980), 429-432
 _____ An Anthology of Religious Texts from Ugarit (ARTU) (Leiden: Brill, 1987)
 _____ "'O death, where is thy sting'", in Ascribe to the Lord: Biblical and Other Studies in Memory of P. C. Craigie, ed. by L. Eslinger and G. Taylor, JSOTSuppl 67 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1988), pp. 99-107
 _____ The Rise of Yahwism: The Roots of Israelite Monotheism, (Leuven: University Press, 1990)
- Moor, J.C. De & K. Spronk 'Problematic Passages in the Legend of Kirtu (I)', UF 14 (1982), 153-171
 _____ 'Problematic Passages in the Legend of Kirtu (II)', UF 14 (1982), 173-190
 _____ 'More on demons in Ugarit (KTU 1.82)', UF 16 (1984), 237-250

- Mulder, M. J. 1 Kings 1-11, Historical Commentary on the OT (Leuven: Peeters, 1998), I
- Muraoka, T. A Greek-English Lexicon of the Septuagint (GELS): Chiefly of the Pentateuch and the Twelve Prophets (Louvain: Peeters, 2002)
- Murphy, R. E. The Song of Song: A Commentary on the Book of Canticles or The Song of Songs (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress Press, 1990)
- Myers, J. M. 1 Chronicles, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965)
 _____ 2 Chronicles, 2nd edn, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1965)
- Myhrman, D. W. 'Die Labartu-Texte', ZA 16 (1902), 141-200
- Naveh, J. and Sh. Shaked Amulets and Magic Bowls: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity (Jerusalem: The Magnes Press, 1985)
 _____ Magic Spells and Formulae: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity (Jerusalem: The Magnes Press, 1993)
- Neusner, J. Sifra: An Analytical Translation vol.3, Ahare Mot, Qedoshim, Emor, Behar and Behuqotai, (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987)
 _____ The Talmud of Babylonia: An American Translation, V.C: Yoma chapters 6-8, Brown Judaic Series (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1994)
 _____ The Talmud of Babylonia: An American Translation, XXXVI.A: Niddah chapters 1-3, Brown Judaic Series 221 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1990)
 _____ The Talmud of Babylonia: An American Translation, III.D: Erubin chapters 7-10, Brown Judaic Series 279 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1993)
- Nickelsburg, G. W. E. 'Apocalyptic and Myth in 1 Enoch 6-11', JBL 96/3 (1976), 383-405
- Niehr, H. 'Zur Entstehung von Dämonen in der Religionsgeschichte Israels: Überlegungen zum Weg des Rešep durch die nordwestsemitische Religionsgeschichte', in Die Dämonen/ Demons: The Demonology of Israelite-Jewish and Early Christian Literature in Context of their Environment, ed. by A. Lange, H. Lichtenberger and K. F. D. Römheld (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003), pp. 84-107
- Noth, M. Leviticus: A Commentary (London: SCM Press, 1965)
- Nougayrol, J. 'La Lamaštu A Ugarit', Ugaritica VI (1969), 393-408
- Oesterley, W. O. E. and T. H. Robinson Hebrew Religion: Its Origin and Development, 2nd rev. enlarged edn, Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge (London: The Macmillan Company, 1947)
- Oesterley, W. O. E. The Psalms, Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge (London: The Macmillan Company, 1939), II

- O’Kane, M. J. ‘Isaiah 28-33: A Literary and Contextual Analysis’ (unpublished doctoral thesis, The University of Edinburgh, 1989)
- Olmo Lete, G. del Mitos y Legendas de Canaan, Fuentes de la Ciencia Bíblica 1, (Madrid: Cristiandad, 1981)
 _____ ‘Deber’, in DDD, pp.231- 232
 _____ Canaanite Religion According to the Liturgical Texts of Ugarit, trans. by W. G. E. Watson (Bethesda: CDL Press, 1999)
- Oswalt, J. N. The Book of Isaiah: Chapters 1-39 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1986)
- Pardee, D. Ugaritic and Hebrew poetic parallelism: a trial cut (Leiden: Brill, 1987)
 _____ ‘Incantations and Rituals’, in The Context of Scripture: Canonical Compositions from the Biblical World, gen. ed. W. H. Hallo, 2 vols (Leiden: Brill, 1997), I, pp. 295-329
 _____ Les Textes Rituels, Ras Shamra-Ugarit 12, 2vols (Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les civilisations, 2000)
 _____ Ritual and Cult at Ugarit, SBL Writings from the Ancient World 10 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 2002)
- Parker, S. B. The Pre-Biblical Narrative Tradition: Essays on the Ugaritic Poems Keret and Aqhat, SBL 24 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1989)
 _____ Ugaritic Narrative Poetry, transl. by M.S. Smith, S.B. Parker, E. L. Greenstein, T. J. Lewis, D. Marcus; ed. by S. Parker, SBL Writings from the Ancient World 9 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1997)
- Patai, R. The Hebrew Goddess (New York: Ktav, 1967)
- Paul, S. M. Amos: A Commentary on the Book of Amos, Hermeneia (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1991)
- Petersen, A. K. ‘The Notion of Demon: Open Questions to a Diffuse Concept’, in Die Dämonen/ Demons: The Demonology of Israelite-Jewish and Early Christian Literature in Context of their Environment, ed. by A. Lange, H. Lichtenberger and K. F. D. Römhald (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003), pp. 23-41
- Pettinato, G. The Archives of Ebla: An Empire Inscribed in Clay (Garden City: Doubleday, 1981)
- Pomponio, F. and P. Xella Les dieux d’Ebla: Étude analytique des divinités éblaïtes à l’époque des archives royales du IIIe millénaire (Münster: Ugarit -Verlag, 1997)
- Pope, M. H. Job: Introduction, Translation, and Notes, 3rd edn, 3rd printing, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1973)
 _____ Song of Songs: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1977)
- Porter, J. R. Leviticus: Commentary (Cambridge: University Press, 1976)

- _____. Song of Songs: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB (Garden City: Doubleday, 1977)
- Porter, S. E. 'Linguistics and Biblical Interpretation' in Methods of Biblical Interpretation, Excerpted from the Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation, ed. by J. H. Hayes, (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 2004), pp. 35-40
- Powell, M. A. What is Narrative Criticism?, Guides to Biblical Scholarship, NT Series (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1990)
- _____. 'Narrative Criticism' in Methods of Biblical Interpretation: Excerpted from the Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation ed. by J. H. Hayes (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 2004), pp. 169-172
- Propp, W. H. C. Exodus 1-18: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB 2 (New York: Doubleday, 1998)
- Rad, G. von Deuteronomy: A Commentary, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1966)
- Ramaroson, L. 'A propos de Gn 4,7', Bib 49 (1968), 233-237
- Rendsburg, G. A. 'Review of Dictionary of Deities and demons in the Bible', BASOR 321 (Feb. 2001), 92-93.
- Renz, T. The Rhetorical Function of the Book of Ezekiel VTSuppl 76 (Leiden: Brill, 1999)
- Riley, G. J. 'Demon', in DDD, pp. 235-240
- Roberts, J. J. M. Nahum, Habakkuk, and Zephaniah: A Commentary, OT Library (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1991)
- Robertson Smith, W. Lectures on the Religion of the Semites: The Fundamental Institutions, 3rd edn (New York: Ktav, 1969)
- Rogerson, J. W. and J. W. McKay Psalms 51-100 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1977)
- Sasson, J. M. 'Review of Dictionary of Deities and Demons in the Bible', JAOS 118 no. 1 (1998), 79-80
- Scerba, A. 'Changing Literary Representations of Lilith and the Evolution of a Mythical Heroine'; <http://feminism.eserver.org/lilith/> ;[Accessed 2007-04-26].
- Schmidt, W. The Origin and Growth of Religion. Facts and Theories, trans. by H. J. Rose, 2nd edn (London: Methuen, 1935)
- Scholem, G. 'Lilith', in *EncJud*¹, XI, pp. 245-249

- Schwartz, H. 'Jewish Tales of the Supernatural', Judaism 36, (1987), 339-351
- Seitz, C. R. Isaiah 1-39, Interpretation: A Bible Commentary for Teaching and Preaching (Louisville: John Knox Press, 1993)
- Simpson, W. K. 'New Light on the God Reshef, Brief Communications', JAOS 73, no. 2 (1953), 86-89
 _____ 'Reshef in Egypt', Orientalia 29 (1960), 63-74
- Sivan, D. A Grammar of the Ugaritic Language (Leiden: Brill, 2001)
- Smith, M. S. 'Interpreting the Baal Cycle', UF 18 (1986), 313-339
 _____ The Ugaritic Baal-cycle: Introduction with Text, Translation and Commentary of KTU 1.1-1.2, VTSuppl. 55 (Leiden: Brill, 1994), I
 _____ The Origins of Biblical Monotheism, Israel's Polytheistic Background and the Ugaritic Texts, (Oxford: University Press, 2001)
- Smith, R. L. Micah – Malachi, WBC 32, (Waco: Word Books Publishers, 1984)
- Snaith, N. H. Leviticus and Numbers (London: Thomas Nelson and Sons Ltd, 1967)
 _____ 'The Meaning of שְׁעִירִים', VT 25 (1975), 115-118
- Soanes, C. and A. Stevenson (eds.) Oxford Dictionary of English, 2nd rev. edn (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005)
- Soden, W. von Akkadisches Handwörterbuch, band I (Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1965)
- Soulen, R. N. & R. K. Soulen Handbook of Biblical Criticism, 3rd rev. and expanded edn (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2001)
- Stephens, W. 'Demons: An Overview', *EncRel*², IV, pp.2275-2282
- Steven, L. Texts and Contexts: Writing About Literature with Critical Theory (New York: Harper Collins, 1994)
- Stol, M. Birth in Babylonia and the Bible: Its Mediterranean Setting (Groningen: Styx, 2000)
- Stuart, D. K. Hosea – Jonah, WBC 31 (Waco: Word Books, 1987)
- Sweeney, M. A. The Twelve Prophets, Berit Olam (Collegeville: The Liturgical Press, 2000), II
 _____ 1 and 2 Kings, OT Library (Louisville: John Knox Press, 2007)
- Tate, M. E. Psalms 51- 100, WBC 20 (Dallas: Word Books, 1990)
- Tawil, H. 'Azazel, the prince of the steeps: A comparative study', ZAW 92 no.1 (1980), 43-59

- Thompson, J. A. The Book of Jeremiah (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980)
 _____ 1,2 Chronicles, The New American Commentary 9 (Nashville: Broadman & Holman Publishers, 1994)
- Thompson, R. C. Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia: Being Babylonian and Assyrian Incantations against the Demons, Ghouls, Vampires, Hobgoblins, Ghosts, and Kindred Evil Spirits, which Attack Mankind (London: Luzac and Co., 1903-4)
- Thureau-Dangin, F. 'Rituel et amulettes contre Labartu', RA 18 (1921), 161-198
- Tigay, J. H. Deuteronomy, JPS Torah Commentary (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society, 1996)
- Toorn, K. van der 'The Theology of Demons in Mesopotamia and Israel', in Die Dämonen: Demons, ed. by A. Lange, H. Lichtenberger and K. F. D. Römheld (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003), pp. 61-83
- Toorn, K. Van der, B. Becking and P. W. Van der Horst (eds.) Dictionary of Deities and Demons in the Bible, 2nd extensively rev. edn (Leiden: Brill, 1999)
- Torczyner, H. 'A Hebrew incantation against night-demons from biblical times', JNES 6, (1947), 18-29
- Trachtenberg, J. Jewish Magic and Superstition: A Study in Folk Religion (New York: Atheneum, 1982)
- Tromp, N. J. Primitive Conceptions of Death and the Nether World in the Old Testament, Biblica et orientalia 21 (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1969)
- Tylor, E. B. Primitive Culture: Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Language, Art, and Custom, 4th rev. edn, 2 vols (London: John Murray, 1903)
- Vries, S. J. de 1 Kings, WBC 12 (Waco: Word Books, 1985)
 _____ 1 and 2 Chronicles (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989)
- Walsh, J. T. 1 Kings, Berit Olam (Collegeville: The Liturgical Press, 1996)
- Watson, W. G. E. Classical Hebrew Poetry: A Guide to its Techniques, JSOTSuppl 26, (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1984)
- Watts, J. D. W. The Books of Joel, Obadiah, Jonah, Nahum, Habakkuk and Zephaniah, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1975)
 _____ Isaiah 1-33, WBC 24 (Waco: Word Books, 1985)
 _____ Isaiah 34-66, WBC 25 (Waco: Word Books, 1987)

- Weinberg, J. 'All You Ever Wanted to know about Lilith! Lilith Sources', Lilith, The Independent Jewish Women's Magazine, premier issue, Fall (1976)
- Weippert, H. Die Prosareden des Jeremiabuches (Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1973), pp. 149-191
- Weiser, A. The Psalms: A Commentary, OT Library (London: SCM Press, 1971)
- Wenham, G. J. The Book of Leviticus (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1979)
 _____ Genesis 1-15, WBC 1 (Waco: Word Books, 1987)
 _____ 'The Theology of Old Testament Sacrifice', in Sacrifice in the Bible, ed. by R. T. Beckwith and M. J. Selman (Carlisle: Paternoster Press; Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1995), pp. 75-87
 _____ Numbers, OT Guides (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997)
- West, D. R. 'Gello and Lamia: Two Hellenic daemons of Semitic origin', UF 23, (1992), 361-368
 _____ Some cults of Greek goddesses and female daemons of oriental origin (Neukirchen Vluyn: Verlag Butzon & Bercker Kevelaer, 1995)
- Wevers, J. W. Ezekiel, The Century Bible (London: Nelson, 1969)
- Whitekettle, R. 'Of Mice and Wren: Terminal Level Taxa in Israelite Zoological Thought', SJOT 17 no. 2 (2003), 163-182
- Whybray, R. N. Job (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 1998)
- Williamson, H. G. M. 1 and 2 Chronicles, New Century Bible Commentary, (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1982), pp. 238-245
- Witton Davies, T. Magic, Divination and Demonology Among the Hebrews and their Neighbours: Including an Examination of Biblical References and of the Biblical Terms (London: James Clarke & Co., 1898)
 _____ 'Magic, Divination, and Demonology among the Semites', The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, 14 no. 4 (1898), 241-251
- Wolff, H. W. Joel and Amos: A Commentary on the Books of the Prophets Joel and Amos, transl. by H. W. Wolff, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1977)
 _____ Hosea: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Hosea, transl. by G. Stansell, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1974; 3rd printing 1982)
- Wong, K. L. The Idea of Retribution in the Book of Ezekiel VTSuppl 87 (Leiden: Brill, 2001)
- Worrell, W. H. 'The Demon of Noonday and Some Related Ideas', JAOS 38 (1918), 160-166
- Wright, C. Deuteronomy, New International Biblical Commentary (Peabody: Hendrickson Publishers, 1998)

- Wright, D. P. The Disposal of Impurity: Elimination Rites in the Bible and in Hittite and Mesopotamian Literature (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987)
 _____ ‘Azazel’, ABD, I, (1992), pp.536-537
- Wyatt, N. ‘Attar and the Devil’, TGUOS 25 (1973), 85- 97
 _____ ‘Atonement Theology in Ugarit and Israel’, UF 8 (1976), 415- 430
 _____ ‘Qeteb’, DDD, pp. 673-674
 _____ ‘Arms and the King: The Earliest Allusions to the Chaoskampf Motif and their Implications for the Interpretation of the Ugaritic and Biblical Traditions’, in ‘Und Mose schrieb dieses Lied auf’: Studien zum Alten Testament und zum Alten Orient, Festschrift für Oswald Loretz zur Vollendung seines 70. Lebensjahres mit Beiträgen von Freunden, Schülern und Kollegen, ed. by M. Dietrich and I. Kottsieper (Münster: Ugarit-Verlag, 1998), pp. 833-882 _____ Religious Texts from Ugarit (RTU), 2nd rev. edn (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002)
- Xella, P. ‘Resheph’, DDD, pp. 700-703
- Yadin, Y. ‘New Gleanings on Resheph from Ugarit’ in Biblical and Related Studies Presented to Samuel Iwry, ed. by A. Kort and S. Morschauer (Winona Lake: Eisenbrauns, 1985)
- Zatelli, I. ‘The Origin of the Biblical Scapegoat Ritual: The Evidence Of Two Eblaite Texts’, VT 48/2 (1998), 254- 263
- Zijl, P.J. Baal: a Study of Texts in Connexion with Baal in the Ugaritic Epics (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Verlag Butzon & Bercker Kevelaer, 1972)
 _____ ‘Translation and Discussion of Text 1001:1-2 (RŠ 15.134:1-2)’, JNSWL 2 (1972), 74-85
 _____ ‘Translation and Discussion of Text 1001:3-5a (RŠ 15.134:3-5a)’, JNSWL 3 (1974), 85-93
- Zimmerli, W. Ezekiel 1: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Ezekiel: Chapters 1-24, transl. by R. E. Clements, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1979)
 _____ Ezekiel 2: A Commentary on the Book of the Prophet Ezekiel: Chapters 25-48, transl. by J. D. Martin, Hermeneia (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1983)