Why post with Preprints.org?

Preprints.org is a multidisciplinary preprint service that is dedicated to sharing all research from the very beginning.

No membership

We welcome new users to directly submit without requiring any endorsement;

Community engagement

Preprints.org fosters community engagement through public discussion and screening by our Advisory Board and screeners, enabling authors to receive valuable feedback and engage in the latest scientific discourse;

Web of Science indexing

By posting your preprint with us, your research will be indexed in the “Web of Science - Preprint Citation Index”, and thus is discoverable by a wider readership;

Easy submission

Navigate a straightforward, user-friendly, and efficient submission process that takes only 3 minutes;

Make your work citable

Each preprint is registered with a unique digital object identifier (DOI) issued by Crossref, making it permanently available and citable;

Free layout editing service

This service helps authors engage their readers with a professionally presented preprint, in addition to meeting the submission requirements of journals;

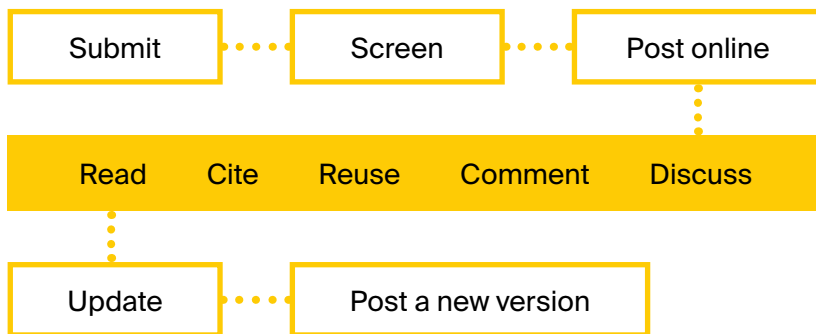

Free plagiarism check

Preprints.org provides free reports that highlight any instances of text duplication, along with advice on where to modify the text, helping to increase the likelihood of passing initial checks when submitting to a peer-reviewed journal;

Open access

All preprints are posted with a Creative Commons CC BY 4.0 license, ensuring that authors retain the copyright and receive credit for their research, while allowing anyone to read and cite their work.

How to submit your research

Submit

Log in with your MDPI account and follow the easy submission guidance.

Screen

All preprints undergo a comprehensive screening before being placed online. This process takes less than 24 hours in most cases.

Post online

Preprints are posted for free after passing the screening process under an open access Creative Commons CC BY 4.0 licence.

Read, cite, reuse, comment, and discuss

Unlimited and free access for readers; Track the impact of your work via the Crossref DOI; Retain copyright and free use of your article; Start a conversation with the scientific community; Obtain public or private feedback from readers at any time.

Post a new version

No matter if you want to include some additional data or make some minor changes to the text, you can do it by posting a new version of your work. A new DOI will be issued for each version.
