

Open Access Publishing

with Taylor & Francis

at no cost to you!

Taylor & Francis open access

Taylor & Francis and the Norwegian Unit consortium have an agreement to support open access publishing at participating institutions.

A full list of participating institutions is available at <https://go.taylorandfrancis.com/UNITauthors>

What does this open access agreement mean for authors?

When an article is published gold open access, the final published version (or Version of Record) is permanently and freely available online.

Corresponding authors at participating institutions may publish their article gold open access with a fully funded Article Publishing Charge (APC).

Authors will be able to choose to publish open access if their article is accepted to the journal following peer-review.

Which journals are covered by this agreement?

Articles accepted for publication in Taylor & Francis Open Select (hybrid) journals which have a standard article publishing charge are eligible to be published open access using this agreement. Articles in our fully open access journals are not covered.

How will authors know if their article has been approved for open access publication?

Shortly after their article is approved, authors will receive an email notification. They will be asked to choose an open access licence for the article. More information is available at authorservices.taylorandfrancis.com

Speak to your librarian to find out more!

Taylor & Francis Group
an informa business

Are all types of publication included?

Only original research papers are covered by the agreement.

The most common eligible article types are:

- Article • Review • Research Article • Review Article • Report

Some articles which are not original research papers, such as Editorials, Announcements, and Book Reviews, are not covered by this open access publishing agreement. If you have a question about eligible article types, please contact Taylor & Francis

If the journal has additional costs, such as page charges or color charges, these fees will still apply and will not be covered by the agreement.

What are the dates of the agreement?

The article will need to be accepted for publication between November 18 2019 and December 31 2022.

License options

Taylor & Francis
OPEN SELECT

Our Open Select (hybrid) journals offer a choice of two licenses:

CCBY (Attribution)

Recommended by your Institution

- Others can distribute, remix, tweak, and build upon the article
- Original author must be credited
- Can reuse commercially

CC BY-NC-ND (Attribution-Non-Commercial-No Derivatives)

- Others can download article and share it with others
- Original author must be credited
- Article can't be changed in any way
- Cannot reuse commercially

The screenshot shows the 'AUTHOR SERVICES' page for Taylor & Francis. The main heading is 'Open access publishing for researchers in Norway'. Below this, it mentions a 'New 'read and publish' agreement with UNIT'. The page content includes a section titled 'UNIT' with a sub-heading 'Corresponding authors based at participating institutions in Norway are now eligible to publish open access in Taylor & Francis and Routledge Open Select (hybrid) journals at no cost to the author.' It also contains sections for 'What should I do to make my research open access?', 'What are the requirements?', and 'Which publishing license will apply?'. There are also navigation links and a search bar at the top.

Taylor & Francis supporting authors

Visit our dedicated authors information page to support Norwegian authors through their open access publishing journey.

<https://go.taylorandfrancis.com/UNITauthors>

Taylor & Francis Group
an informa business